

Trustees Announce 23rd Annual South End Garden Tour

Saturday, June 18

The Trustees announced that the 23rd Annual South End Garden Tour will take place this year on Saturday, June 18, 2016 from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., rain or shine.

Located in the country's largest district of surviving brick Victorian row houses, this year's tour will once again include rooftop terrace gardens with city views, private backyard and front yard gardens, community gardens, and neighborhood parks.

This year's tour encompasses gardens located within the Columbus Avenue, Tremont Street, Berkeley Street and West Newton Street area of the South End. The tour will begin at the Boston Center for the Arts Plaza at the corner of Clarendon and Tremont Street. Advance tickets are $24 for Trustees members, $30 for nonmembers and $28 for Trustees members, $35 for nonmembers on the day of the Tour.

The South End Garden Tour was created 23 years ago to benefit the South End & Lower Roxbury Open Space Land Trust, one of the country's first nonprofit organizations charged with protecting urban community gardens and pocket parks within a historic neighborhood. Now part of the Trustees Boston Region, the gardens are managed in partnership with community volunteers.

History talk tackles today's hot-button topic

South End author Russ Lopez discusses urban renewal, affordable housing

BY MICHELE D. MANISCALCO

Having presented his fourth and latest book, "Boston's South End: The Clash of Ideas in a Historic Neighborhood" at the South End Historical Society and the South End Branch Library last fall, South End-based author and academic Russell Lopez gave his March 6 book talk at a venue that resonates deeply with its subject: More Than Words at 242 East Berkeley Street,

The Search For Justice Continues

BPD Video Highlights Unsolved Lenox Stret Murder

SUBMITTED BY BPD

Late last year, the Boston Police Department launched a new video series aimed at securing justice for homicide victims and the families impacted by the tragic death of a loved one. The BPD seeks to leverage the latest technology and social media as an innovative means of enhancing public outreach and generating additional information for homicide detectives.

This case features Richard King, 22, who was murdered in July of 2011 in the Lenox Street Housing Development in the South End. In the video, Richard's mother, Melinda Tharps, and BPD Homicide Detective Michael Walsh discuss the facts and circumstances surrounding Richard's death culminating in a compelling appeal to those who may have information which could help investigators solve the case.

We encourage community members to watch the videos from this series, listen to the families, hear their pleas for justice and help us solve their case.

As always, the men and women of the BPD strongly urge anyone who may have any information on any unsolved homicide to call us. Community members can share information anonymously by calling the CrimeStoppers Tip Line at 1 (800) 494-TIPS (8477) or texting the word "TIP" to CRIME (27463). The Boston Police Department will stringently protect the identity of those who wish to remain anonymous.

Street Cleaning is HERE!

The Boston Public Works Department (PWD) announced that efforts are underway to clean the streets following this winter's snow and ice, overnight posted street sweeping has resumed and posted residential street sweeping will resume in the North End, South End and Beacon Hill on March 1.

Snow and ice no longer pose an issue for street cleaning on these routes and this weekend's forecast allows PWD to proactively clean the streets. Several hand cleaning crews and mechanical sweepers will be deployed citywide, within main squares, business districts and main thoroughfares.

Residents are asked to obey parking restrictions in order to assist with the City's efforts to clean the streets. Violators who do not move their cars during street sweeping hours will be subject to a $40 ticket and towing.

figured prominently in Lopez's talk. More Than Words, a non-profit book and media store headquartered in Waltham, provides youth who are homeless, in foster care or involved with the courts and family services with employment, career development and life-skills training. South End denizens of all ages and lengths of residency filled the seats, listening with rapt attention as Lopez shared excerpts from his book, anecdotes and additional background on Boston's post World War II urban renewal program at this pivotal moment when reauthorization of urban renewal zones is being discussed among the Boston Redevelopment Authority, the City Council and concerned residents.

Lopez, an assistant professor at the Boston University School of Public Health, talked at some length about urban renewal philosophy in the postwar 20th century, its implementation in the South End and the landscape it left behind. According to Lopez, a 1954 amendment to the city development laws allowed areas that were formerly residential to be redeveloped for other purposes, clearing the path for the city to reclaim and level residences for redevelopment. The city hoped to prevent industry from fleeing the city for the Route 128 suburbs by offering the Harrison Avenue and Albany Street area for industrial development due to its highway and railroad access. Lopez pointed out that there were a few industrial concerns such as The Boston Herald, Graybar Electric and Quinzani's and a lot of open space, leaving the area desolate in the evening and inhospitable to nightlife. Lopez described the mid-1950s school of thought that dense housing and narrow streets should be replaced with apartment blocks and wider, more car-friendly thoroughfares, which would provide a more healthful environment. Lopez noted that while the clearing of the New York Streets predated the destruction of Boston's West End, the West End's demise has been more documented, with only a few authors such as New York Streets native Mel King talking about the disappearance of his neighborhood. Lopez noted that paradoxically, the city ordered the leveling of thousands of homes in the South End, then pointed to the significant loss of population to justify its redevelopment plans.

Lopez discussed the prominent role of non-profit community service organizations in the South End and the mix of lower and moderate-income as well as luxury housing and population, reporting that approximately 5,000 of the South End's approximately 17,000 housing units are Boston Housing Authority owned or other income-tied housing. He said he was surprised to learn that the model of mixed-income housing that is successful in Boston has failed in other cities. "Living in a complex that is one-third, one-third, one-third: affordable, moderate and market rate, I was shocked to find out that in many parts of the country, it doesn't work. In some place like Atlanta, they built a [mixed-income] complex and the market-rate people didn't want to move in." He continued, "Where I live, we all feel grateful. The Section 8 people feel grateful because it's a nice place; the moderate-income people are grateful because they are teachers, firefighters and postal workers and they can afford to live the South End and people like myself got a deal because it is still cheaper than a lot of the South End." The discussion also touched on the South End's Villa Victoria and nearby Tent City and their history as grassroots-generated led affordable housing developments.

More Than Words launched in Waltham in 2004 and opened its East Berkeley Street location in 2011. Jodi Rosenbaum, founder and CEO of More Than Words, was pleased with the event's outcome and the outreach that More Than Words achieved. She commented in a follow-up e-mail, "We had about 50 people in attendance and we were delighted by the turnout. It was truly a testament to Russ' book, the community of the South End, and our amazing youth at More Than Words that it was such a stellar event. We believe More Than Words is powerfully situated to grow and be a bridge in the South End, especially amidst all the great wealth and development and the enduring economic and social needs in the community. We were grateful for the opportunity to host this event and share how relevant MTW is to the community as a 'missing middle': a bookstore that brings people together with our youth at the center."

While Lopez will continue promoting "Boston's South End" with appearances at the MIT Women's League on March 14 and at The History Project at 29 Stanhope Street on March 24, he is already working on a new book, a history of Boston from 1945 forward.

Hats off to "Caps"

IRNE nominations

JULES BECKER

In a time of rampant bullying and presidential candidates pandering for votes with xenophobia and equal opportunity putdowns, hats off to the new musical "Caps for Sale." Adapted from the Esphyr Slobodkina classic with book and score by Gabriel Carbajal and Paul Lewis, this Boston Children's Theatre world premiere focuses on cap seller Pezzo's quest for new customers, an odyssey that turns into an unusual act of heroism. Artistic director Burgess Clark really sells this disarmingly simple story to parents and children alike with a bravura turn by guest artist Steve Gagliastro as Pezzo and a wonderfully energetic ensemble.

Pezzo may be very different from Tevye the Milkman in "Fiddler on the Roof," yet both struggling heroes have the heart and soul of an Everyman. At the same time, both heroes confront prejudice—fear of strangers in "Caps for Sale" and hatred of Jews in "Fiddler on the Roof." Ultimately Pezzo's good fortune with "a barrel of monkeys" and fair-minded villagers brings an understanding absent from anti-Semitism-ridden Anatevka and Czarist Russia. Collaborators Carbajal and Lewis capture the cap seller's challenges and eventual vindication in their lively score as well as in a book that catches the spirit of its source. The popular tale's legion of fans will find that the tight 65-minute show (with a brief intermission) does full justice to both Pezzo's adventure and the outer frame in which young child Eva's mother narrates the atypical salesman's entertaining story during a thunderstorm.

Gagliastro is as winning as Pezzo himself. He sings robustly about the colors of the caps he wears like a tower on his head. Speaking with a convincing Italian accent (as the mountains he faces may be Italian Alps), he finds the genial cap seller's insecurity about living up to his father and grandfather's professional success in the family business as well as his growing awareness that he can make a difference for the stranger-distrusting village and a traveling circus without a clown. Joshua Mooiweer as the village's controlling Constable and William O'Brien as his slavish deputy Yervant engage in some amusing slapstick that somewhat calls to mind the interaction of hunter Gaston and his prat-falling assistant LaFou in "Beauty and the Beast." Carline Shaheen has affecting sweetness and simplicity as Pezzo's young village supporter Alina. Kudos to the dozen or so young actors who frolic as the pivotal cap-stealing monkeys—some with flips and all with eye-catching agility. Jeffrey E. Salzberg's lighting makes the cap seller's rising fortunes shimmer as much as the tree where the monkeys play.

Pezzo energetically embraces the potential to be extraordinary in all of us. Boston Children's Theatre's labor of love "Caps for Sale" is benchmark special.

Theater District South—from the Lyric Stage Company of Boston to the Boston Center for the Arts—is IRNE nomination rich this year. The Lyric's revivals of "My Fair Lady" and "Intimate Apparel" are big multiple nominees—the former for small stage best musical and the latter for midsize best play. SpeakEasy Stage Company has received multiple nods for its area premieres of "Appropriate" and "Mothers and Sons," both midsize best play contenders. Small stage-multiple developer Ronald Simons's plans show the exterior of the church remaining largely the same. The proposal does call for roof terraces and skylights.

At 85 feet in height, the church building will accommodate seven stories, according to his filing with the BRA. He's proposing mostly one- and two-bedroom condos, with four studios and eight three-bedroom units.

Simons is proposing 73 parking spaces—48 in a basement converted to a garage, the rest in a neighboring garage. He says he will also install storage space for 58 bicycles.

Simons says the church was erected in 1859 for Boston College - and was designed by the same architect responsible for Holy Name Cathedral. All of the religious items still inside the building will be given to the Archdiocese of Boston as part of its official deconsecration as a house of worship.

The project's main entrance will be in a separate building on the site that went up in 1960.

brownstone exterior, and the interior is being revamped through upgrades to the common areas to create more of an open and welcoming floor plan, along with improvements to the individual units.

"We are proud to now be able to improve this meaningful property for our neighborhood," said Vanessa Calderón-Rosado, CEO of IBA. "We want all of our community members to live in an atmosphere that provides the best care and supportive services so they can live quality lives, and this renovation will achieve that."

Residencia Betances was originally developed by IBA in 1993, and is one of the few properties that serves the unique purpose of providing supportive housing to Spanish-speaking residents who are formerly homeless clients of the Department of Mental Health. IBA works with the department to ensure that residents have access to a range of supportive services that enable them to live successfully and optimize their overall health, wellness and recovery. A bilingual and bicultural support staff works around the clock with residents to handle treatments and further their rehabilitation goals. Additionally, the staff assists them with a wide range of services that include symptom management, community skill development, support with medication administration and health care appointments, meal preparation, and all residents are encouraged to partake in social, employment and wellness activities.

"We are happy to finance such a unique and important property in the South End," said Undersecretary of Housing and Community Development Chrystal Kornegay. "We are proud that our involvement with IBA on this project dates back to 1990, and that we are now able to reinvest in this project, ensuring that it will be a part of the community for years to come. IBA's deep-rooted history of providing high-quality living arrangements for its residents gives us confidence that in partnership with the Department of Mental Health this community will be getting everything they need to live fulfilling lives."

A front-runner in affordable housing since 1968, IBA's dedication to the local community and quality of resident services it provides, allow it to stand out amongst its peers. Created by a group of Puerto Rican activists, IBA grew out of the fight against displacement and has been continuing that mission ever since. The organization has preserved affordability amidst gentrification and rising property values in the South End, while increasing public safety and building community for the neighborhood.

The funds for this project come from DHCD's Housing Preservation Stabilization and Facilities Consolidation funds, and in part by the Community Economic Development Assistance Corporation. Renovations to the project began in January of this year and are expected to be completed in the fall.

BPD Officers Arrest Reckless Moped Operator in the South End

SUBMITTED BY BPD

About 12:58pm on Saturday, February 27, 2016, officers from District D-4 (South End) responded to a call for a person with a gun in the area of Tremont Street and Mass Ave. On arrival, officers spoke to the victim who stated that he was driving along Tremont Street when he observed a Hispanic male on a moped weaving in and out of traffic. When the victim attempted to pass the moped, he states the suspect struck his passenger side mirror with his hand. When the victim stopped to check the damage, the suspect began threatening him. Victim states that the suspect brandished a firearm and threatened to harm him. Officers promptly broadcast a description of the suspect over the police radio. According to the victim, the suspect was last seen pushing his moped away from the scene because the moped had stalled. In short time, officers located an individual fitting the suspect's description in the area of 9 Trotter Court. While officers questioned the suspect about his possible involvement in the earlier incident, the victim was brought to the scene for identification purposes. Once on scene, the victim looked at the person being detained and stated, "That's him." Officers arrested Giovanni Pagan, 25, of Boston and charged him with Assault by means of a Dangerous Weapon (Gun). The suspect was not in possession of a firearm when taken into custody.

The backstory of Spotlight and the former South End News' editor

BY TRISH BENDIX,
COURTNEY AFTER ELLLEN.COM

This year's Oscar for Best Picture went to Spotlight, the true story of a group of editors and writers at The Boston Globe who reported on the attempted covering up of sexual abuse within the Catholic church. While the film was well-written and expertly acted (winning Best Ensemble at the Independent Spirit Awards, among others), it turns out that this "true story" is not as honest as has been portrayed. Specifically, it completely left out queer news editor Susan Ryan-Vollmar of The Boston Phoenix (and former editor-in-chief at Bay Windows and South End News), where the real investigation began with her reporter, Kristen Lombardi.

As www.bitchflicks.com reports, The Phoenix was the first to tackle the case of the sex-offending priests, but the film doesn't credit them at all.

Tom McCarthy, the co-writer and director, did interview Lombardi as research for the script, but he decided her role wasn't important enough to include in the final cut of the film. Instead McCarthy decided to focus on white-guy, mainstream newspaper mythology, and that focus not only makes the film untrue, it renders it dramatically inert.

In 2012, Susan penned a letter to air her grievances with the Globe's taking credit without any hat tip to the Phoenix and their original reporting. She notes:

The Globe's work on this story was phenomenal, and they deserve perhaps 90 percent of the credit for blowing the sex abuse story wide open. But they continue to insist on taking 100 percent credit. Not only does the Globe today fail to credit former Phoenix reporter Kristen Lombardi's work, but it seems to take credit for the swarm of other stories on clergy sex abuse that popped up around the country.

She also shared this comment with Boston

Magazine last year:

Until the Phoenix's reporting, no Boston outlet had pulled together the full extent of the horror taking place within the Boston Archdiocese: Law's knowledge of the abuse and his decision to keep pedophile priests employed, and the fact that it wasn't the case of one bad priest, but many. The Phoenix's reporting was so solid and convincing on these points that the Boston Herald took the extremely unusual step of calling for Law to come clean in an editorial, and cited the Phoenix reporting in its piece. The late David Brudnoy did the same on his well-regarded radio show. To say that Kristen's reporting merely raised suspicions without proving anything shows a rather astonishing level of ignorance about her work.

Susan also reported on issues relating to the church and the backlash it faced after the Globe's pieces (as highlighted in Spotlight) enlightened the public to what was going on with their local Catholic Archdiocese. In a 2006 story, she wrote:

It was one thing to edit the Phoenix's coverage of the clergy-sex-abuse scandal as a Catholic. It was something else to edit the paper's coverage of 9/11 as, well, an American. But it was another thing entirely to direct the paper's coverage of the story of same-sex marriage in Massachusetts. For me, a lesbian raising a child with my partner of 20 years, the story of Goodridge v. Dept. of Public Health was personal in a way the clergy-sex-abuse and 9/11 stories weren't. I was deeply engaged — and enraged — by the first two stories. But the story of same-sex marriage in Massachusetts changed my life.

Since leaving the Phoenix, Susan worked as the editor of Bay Windows and South End News, and has even contributed to the Boston Globe, including a piece last summer on how American policies on LGBT rights directly affects how LGBTs are treated in other nations. Susan now works in consulting and has worked with several LGBT clients including the Family Equality Council, GLAD, and MassEquality.

Is Spotlight a great film? Yes. But does it oversimplify the events of what really happened and fail to credit two women who played a large part in the ultimate take down celebrated in the Oscar-winning piece of, ultimately, fiction. Considering there is only one woman in the final product (played by Rachel McAdams), it seems like one giant missed opportunity.

NEIDL National Emerging
Infectious Diseases
Laboratories

We're Seeking Input from Our Community.

The National Emerging Infectious Diseases Laboratories (NEIDL) is seeking applications for new members for its Community Liaison Committee (CLC). The CLC was formed to facilitate communication between the NEIDL and the community and to ensure transparency in the activities of the NEIDL.

The mission of the CLC is to promote a continuing conversation between the community and the NEIDL about the NEIDL's activities and research. This dialogue must be an honest and respectful exchange of information, questions, and concerns intended to build trust and understanding.

The NEIDL, owned and operated by Boston University, is dedicated to the development of diagnostics, vaccines, and treatments for newly emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases. The NEIDL contains state-of-the-art BSL-2, BSL-3, and BSL-4 laboratories to conduct this important research in a safe and secure environment.

Individuals interested in becoming members of the committee may apply online at www.bu.edu/NEIDL or by contacting Valeda Britton, Executive Director, Community Relations/Boston University Medical Campus; email: neidl@bu.edu; phone: 617-638-1911.

All applications must be received by April 1, 2016.

MONDAY, MARCH 21

*Bruce C. Bolling Building
Roxbury, MA, 02119*

PROJECT DESCRIPTION:

After meeting many of you at the PLAN: Dudley Square Open House and Walking Tour, we will gather on March 21st at our Visioning Workshop to prioritize what we have heard and begin to update the vision for Dudley Square.

PLAN: Dudley Square is an initiative to think strategically about the types of uses and the scale of development best suited for the future of Dudley Square and Roxbury. The goals of this study are to provide an inclusive community engagement process, create an updated vision with the community, and establish an implementation plan that will lead to the issuance of Requests for Proposals ("RFPs") for publicly-owned and vacant privately-owned parcels in Dudley Square.

We look forward to having you join us at the workshop.
