New exhibit at the Piano Craft Gallery is the cat’s pajamas!

By Michele D. Mariscalco

“Cats and Crystals,” an exhibit by Erik Graz that opened at the Piano Craft Gallery, 797 Tremont Street, on Friday, October 6, combines two widely popular themes—feline companions and things that sparkle and shine.

While the initial draw may be plain to see, “Cats and Crystals,” which runs through October 28, has a highly personal and evoca-

Illegal Sunday parking causes Facebook kerfuffle

By Michele D. Mariscalco

A South Sider from the Ellis Neighborhood Association area, frustrated on a recent Sunday at being unable to find a place to park while seeing about a dozen non-resident cars parked in resident spaces on one side of her block, posted to Facebook’s South End Community Board last week asking who is responsible for parking enforcement, unwittingly starting a heated conversation that ranged from amusement to outrage and contained conflicting information.

Some residents reported calling 911 to report Sunday parking violations to varying results, from a reported quick response to none at all. Some residents were reluctant to call 911 for parking violations because they did not deem it an emergency and they were concerned about police officers being diverted.

Celebrating Kip Teirnan’s Legacy

By Sue O’Connell

More than 300 people attended the dedication of the Kip Teirnan Memorial on Saturday, October 6.

To celebrate, a street fair was held by the site of the memorial, on Dartmouth Street, between Brighton and Newbury Streets. The block was closed to traffic to make way for a street fair, which included food trucks, WERS music from the Aardvark Jazztet, and face painters, balloon twisting and other activities for kids.

Mayor Walsh was present with a proclamation declaring October 6, 2018 Kip Teirnan Day on the City of Boston.

How We’re Creating More Affordable Housing

By Mayor Martin J. Walsh

Boston is going through a period of historic growth—the kind our city hasn’t seen in decades. More people are choosing to put down roots and start families here. More businesses are choosing to open their doors here. Students from all over the world come to attend our universities and colleges each year.

As Boston grows, we must keep

Researchers at Boston Medical Center (BMC) have received a $32,871 grant to educate hospital providers statewide on how best to counsel women about contraception use, particularly long-acting reversible contraception methods like intrauterine devices (IUDs) and implants. The program, funded by the Massachusetts Department of Health and Human Services, will work with the 44 maternity hospitals, with more intensive interventions at the hospitals that serve a patient population with the greatest need, where this training will have the largest impact.

Researchers are focusing on the maternity hospitals since discussing contraception options with pregnant women has been shown to be a safe, effective, and convenient strategy for averting unwanted pregnancy. Given the personal nature of birth control, it is important for clinical and technical staff to be educated on how to best approach and counsel these women in a patient-centered fashion. All hospitals with maternity services in Massachusetts will be offered a grand rounds, led by BMC researchers and trained physicians, on the topic of shared decision-making around contraception. These hospitals will also receive access to educational materials online, and provider and staff leaders will be invited to an annual conference on the topic. At hospitals with more intensive interventions, BMC clinician researchers will lead on-site training on contraceptive counseling and provision, logistics, and creating best practices.

"Even recognizing our biases when speaking with patients, to understanding how to stock, bill, and code for IUDs, all staff who are involved in this process need to understand how to best offer contraception options to women," say Katharine O’Connell White, OB/GYN at BMC and principal investigator on the project. "Every institution is different, and we will tailor the training to fit their specific needs."

Researchers want to make the more intensive interventions widespread as possible. They plan to offer the on-site training and online tools not only to obstetrics and gynecology providers, but also to primary care and emergency medicine providers, as well as pharmacists and support staff. An online vault of the educational materials, they will seek community input from a patient advisory board to ensure cultural sensitivity and prevent biases. They will also study how the interventions changed practices at hospitals and health outcomes for the women they serve.

"Our goal is to empower women to have access to all contraception options so they can get the method that works best for them and where they need it," says White, who is also an assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Boston University School of Medicine.

Friends Of The South End Library

Submitted by Marlene Niemiec

The acclaimed Boston playwright and actress, Melissa Lopez, will be at the South End Library to talk about her work on Tuesday October 30 at 6:30 PM. Lopez will be introduced by Isabel Martinez Boulard, Distinguished Professor of Arts and Humanities at the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, MA.

Lopez is recognized as one of the most exciting playwrights currently working in the U.S. She is the youngest of the four children of August Wilson, one of the most prominent black playwrights. In 2013, she was named the first Andrew Mellon Playwright-in-Residence at the Huntington Theatre Company.

Friends Of The South End Library (FOSEL) received an unexpected gift of $5,000 for its Capital Campaign from the estate of poet Victor Hornsby, who passed away earlier this year at the age of 94. He lived around the corner from the library, where he would read his poetry from time to time, and where he was a much-appreciated member of its longstanding book club. He served for many years on the board of the New England Poetry Club, where he welcomed new members and facilitated writing workshops. His last collection, Thoughts after Spenser, came out two years ago. Thank you, Victor.

South End Library Renovation Update

Library Park’s redesign has been completed and the trees have been pruned but additional park furniture is still on back order. As the image above shows, it looks a little barren at the moment. FOSEL’s board has applied to the Community Preservation Fund (CPF) for a $50,000 grant to pay for several projects, including landscaping, a combination of bluestone curbing and wrought iron fencing to protect garden beds, repair and refurbishment of the Tremont and West Newton streets tree enclosures; and to restore the two Light Wells that are connected to a groundwater preservation system. The CPF will take at least six months to make decisions about its grants.

Public meetings will be organized after that, to discuss other things, solicit your comments on a proposed planting plan we submitted as part of our CPA application, as per below.

In the meantime, FOSEL has ordered more than 2,000 spring bulbs for the park’s spring performance. The tree enclosures around the library have been beautified, too, with azaleas, grasses and perennials.

FOSEL is in discussion with the project managers and leadership of the BPL to manage the next steps of the Library’s downtown renovation. Details will follow as soon as we know them.

Sewing Classes For The Young

our focus on the families and communities that make our city the diverse, welcoming and world-class place it is. To do that, residents must be able to afford to live here in the city they love, families must be able to grow, and young people must be able to make our city their home.

To achieve that, we’re working hard to increase Boston’s affordable housing stock — that includes building housing across a range of incomes, and focusing on ensuring there are income-restricted homes being built throughout Boston. Just last month, we increased our overall housing goals from creating 53,000 units to 69,000 units by 2030 to meet Boston’s growing population and increase the number of housing opportunities available to residents. These new housing goals, which were first set in 2014 through our housing plan, build on our commitment to increasing access to homeownership, preventing displacement and promoting fair and equitable housing access.

As we build more housing in Boston to relieve housing pressure, our regional partners are also working to ensure their cities and towns keep up with the demand for affordable housing. Boston can’t do this alone — and that’s why I’m proud, early this morning, I joined leaders from surrounding communities who are part of the Metrowest Mayors Coalition to announce a new regional housing production goal for coalition cities and towns to meet the demands of a robust regional economy and growing population in Boston and surrounding areas. Together the 13 members of the Metrowest Mayors Coalition announced a target to create 185,000 new units of housing across the region by the year 2030.

We are at a pivotal time in Greater Boston as our economy continues to grow and thrive, and more people move to our communities. I know housing is the number one concern for so many families in Boston, and addressing it is my top priority. Of the 69,000 new units that will be created by 2030, 15,820 of them will be income restricted. By 2030, the total number of income-restricted housing units in Boston will be nearly 70,000. We are also committed to acquiring 1,000 market-rate rental units from the housing market and making them income restricted units.

If you think finding affordable housing, or becoming a homeowner, isn’t a reality for you — explore the resources the City of Boston offers. Take a home buying class. Apply for an affordable home buying opportunity. Apply for an income-restricted apartment. You can find out more information at https://www.boston.gov/departments/neighborhood-development, and we’ll continue to work hard to make sure all families who want to live in Boston are able to.

the quality that goes beyond the initial fun of cat-latchkey and glimpses of glitter cleverly grouped and positioned around the gallery. Directly in front of the entrance, a table that evokes Grandma's living room awaits, with an armchair sporting an overstuffed cat pillow and an afghan, a side table filled with cat figurines and crystals, and a pole lamp adorned with cascading strands of crystals. Elsewhere, cats and crystals peek out from tables tall and small; from the shelves of the gallery’s desk; and from deep, recessed windows that give the figurines arrangements a shadowbox effect. One ceramic cat rolls on its back under a coffee table while elsewhere, another climbs a wall near some of Grau’s paintings, which echo both themes. “All of that stuff usually sits in my home, so now my home is a very empty place,” Grau said.

Grau, president of the gallery, displays many paintings of his own 14-year-old rescue cats at home, as well as art by other artists from his own home. Many of the figurines, decorative plates and other items are mid-century retro, bringing warmth to the vast, white-walled space. Another revealing and recurring detail in the paintings is a set of coasters sporting the MBTA logo.

“I am a dedicated MBTA rider. I used to travel around and do nothing in the public schools, and I knew every bus route, every train stop, what was the closest stop to every school I worked at. I was like a master of the meeting with BPD over the past couple of decades, the message has been absolutely consistent. JFX, call 911, JFX, call 911, JFX, call 911. The city and the police want these reports for pattern analysis and resource deployment decisions. No one should ever be hesitant about logging a call into 911 because the system is built on a hierarchy of call importance. No units will be delayed from some life-saving function because a call was made about a parking issue, a permitted contractor, or any number of other less serious concerns.”

He added, “In fact, much to the annoyance of the police, we have had a hard time convincing neighbors to make the call to 911 for what may not be a life-threatening emergency.”

In addition to discussing the incorrect protocols for reporting illegal Sunday parking, some posters called into question the legitimacy of parking reserved for residents themselves. One very vocal member of the South End Community Board called out “suburbanites” in the South End, who depend on cars and on-street parking, and called those who report resident parking violations “entitled.”

That commenter predicted the end of resident parking permits in a matter of years.

Often implied that they are simply reporting violations of the existing laws. A neighbor in the area lamented seeing drivers without handicap placards illegally taking the handicapped space in front of her home, claiming that differentially 311 generally results in officers arriving promptly, trying to contact the car owner to move it and writing a ticket, calling 911 rarely elicits a response. The South End News went directly to the source to seek the proper protocol. In a telephone interview, a spokesman for the BPD said that contrary to what some residents believe, 911 is the number to call when they want a response to a situation, whether it is illegal parking or a late-night noise complaint in addition to the more serious crimes of theft and violence.

The spokesman explained that they receive and log all complaints and will use their own discretion in deciding in which order to respond to situations. In the case of illegal parking on a Sunday, the spokesman affirmed that BPD will send an available officer to ticket for parking violations, since Boston Traffic Department is not available on Sunday.

This year, ABCD honors NBA Coach Doc Rivers as the co-founder of ABCD Hoop Dreams, our signature basketball tournament fundraiser for ABCD youth services & educational initiatives, including WorkSmart and SummerWorks. Since its inception in 2011, ABCD Hoop Dreams has enabled thousands of low-income and poverty-stricken young people to overcome the odds by financially funding programs that set goals in education and a successful career path. memorial was unveiled by Rosie’s Place on Dorchester Street in the Back Bay to honor Kip Tieman (1926-2011). Kip Tieman (1926-2011) founded Rosie’s Place, the first women’s shelter in the United States, in 1974. She left an indelible mark on Boston, her adopted city, through her fearless vision and unyielding commitment to social justice. The memorial recognizes her contributions toward creating better lives for Boston’s poor and forgotten.

The sculpture is comprised of three stainless-steel arches that people can pass under as they walk on Dorchester Street between Boylston and Newbury Streets. Passages from Kip’s writings are engraved on the columns holding up the arches, making her voice still heard to all who pass by.

The memorial in Boston Back Bay recognizes her contributions toward creating better lives for Boston’s poor and forgotten. Rosie’s Place not only provides meals and shelter but also raises awareness for 12,000 women a year through wide-ranging support, housing and education services. Rosie’s Place relies solely on the generous support of individuals, foundations and corporations and does not accept any city, state or federal funding. Thanks to these donations, 53 cents of every dollar raised goes directly to services for poor and homeless women. Learn more at http://www.rosiesplace.org.
