Dog Lady

—Dave

Dear Dave,

Yes, he is patient and loving. Even with medication, people don’t change overnight, why should dogs? Sadie is working through her issues and this takes time. Sending her to daycare every day was a fabulous idea. Keep her there.

When Dog Lady got her rescue dog, she was a bundle of nerves. He was adopted in the house. Dog Lady thought she’d go crazy with this skittish bouncy terrier. Yet, over two years, sweet Dexter has calmed down considerably. He’s still occasionally scared of men walking behind him on the street. He stops and waits until they pass. He can get nervous when Dog Lady leaves the room but he’s not nearly as terrified as he used to be. He takes no medication except good food, lots of cuddling with his humans and a good doggy daycare care where he can mix it up with his own kind—so very important for a dog’s mental health.

Dear Dog Lady,

I need some advice. My neighbor is fostering a very timid little dog, Vivian. She is very sweet and shy. Marla has had her about 24 hours. And the dog is so frightened she won’t poop. She hasn’t gone to the bathrooms since Marla brought her home, but she has eaten dinner and breakfast. The poor little thing needs to poop. Any advice?

—Janet

Dear Janet,

You wrote a follow-up email to “Ask Dog Lady” saying all is well. Vivian did her business and everybody exhaled. The anxious foster dog simply needed a little time and space.

Ms. Dog Lady tells a story about her mother, Mother-In-Law-Dog Lady, who had to care for her daughter’s cats when daughter went away to college. Mother-In-Law wanted to feed dry food instead of canned but, at first, the cats refused to eat the dry stuff. Mother-In-Law went to the family veterinarian and asked for help to coax the cats to eat. The wise vet told her not to do a thing because, eventually, the cats would get hungry enough to chew down. And they did.

This is a good lesson for anyone whose dog refuses to follow simple advice. If you wait long enough, everything comes out for the best.

occasion, the placement of a red, white and blue wreath at the park's sculpture of male and female soldiers by city councilor at large, Michelle Wu and Boston Veterans Services commissioner Giselle Sterling. Members of all six branches of the United States armed forces were called forward to be recognized.

Efraín Salgado sang the “Star Spangled Banner” and Sebastian Medina sang “La Borinqueña,” the Puerto Rican national anthem. Among the crowd of approximately 40 people were Virginia Caldentey-Rosado, Inspiring Boricuas de Acción (IBA) CEO and Josefina Fontanez, Boston's first Hispanic female election commissioner and the first Latina elected to the Electoral College of Massachusetts.

The park pays special tribute to the Borinqueneers, the 65th Infantry Regiment, the first Puerto Rican regiment of the United States Army which has gone to battle since World War I.

Speakers included Massachusetts Secretary of Veterans Services Francisco Urena; Boston Mayor Martin J. Walsh; Boston Commissioner of Veterans Services Giselle Sterling; Boston Police Commissioner William Gross; Boston Fire Commissioner Joseph Finn; Boston City Councilor Michelle Wu and Ed Flynn; 9th Suffolk District state senator-elect Jon Santiago, a captain in the US Army Reserves, and Dr. Enzie Rosado, director of military outreach at Columbia Southern University.

Secretary Urena said, “This monument continues to honor all veterans and the Puerto Rican veterans who have served with distinction and honor.” In his address, Walsh noted with pride that the Puerto Rican Veterans Monument Park in Boston is the first and only monument to Puerto Rican veterans, male and female, in the US.

“This monument represents all of our gratitude, it helps keep stories alive and it shows our commitment to making sure that veterans have all the supports they need to get through their own lives. Our commitment is a holistic approach including housing, social supports and health care. It’s about helping the vets work through their limits and unlock the skills of civilian life,” Walsh said. The mayor then described the city’s Veterans Care program, which helps veterans with PTSD. “The most important thing we can do is to say thank you, gracias,” Walsh added.

He called the unveiling of the entrance arch a symbol of the city’s ongoing commitment to the veteran community, concluding with the words of President John F. Kennedy,

“We must never forget that the highest appreciation is not to utter the words, but to live by them.” Flynn, who served in the U.S. Navy for 23 years, was stationed in Guantanamo Bay and in the Persian Gulf during Operation Enduring Freedom.

Flynn said after the ceremony, “It was an honor to serve omen along with the Puerto Rican National Guard. He described the Puerto Rican service members as “very hard-working and always looking out for other vets.” Wu saluted the contributions of service members with remarks delivered fluidly in Spanish.

The entrance arch, which was draped in red, white and blue bunting, was unveiled by Mayor Walsh, some of the government officials and a member of the military. The arch reads, “Puerto Rican Veterans Memorial Plaza” “Bienvenidos” (Welcome).

Outrageously Wrong

The Play That Goes Wrong, Mischief Theatre tour at Emerson Colonial Theatre, through November 11. BroadwayinBos.com

By Jules Becker

Sharply timed silliness is not easy. Think of the slapstick of the musical "Spamalot" and the set hijinks and cast romp of the inspired play "Noises Off." Now add take-off on classic Agatha Christie. The result is deliberately outrageous but always hilarious. "The Play That Goes Wrong," now in a rollicking Broadway in Boston tour at the Emerson Colonial Theatre, Theatersgoers will know right away that slapstick is the delightful order of the day right from the start. The Emerson Colonial marquee spoofs the play's title, and playbills purposely have the word "WRONG" in red with the 'G' trailing off lower than the other letters, and both the 'G' and the 'S' of 'COLES' split up as if murder victims themselves.

Then, like "Noises Off," the cast members are listed with their actor roles on one page of the program and with their characters in the play with this play "The Murder at Havesham Manor" on another. "The Murder at Havesham Manor" is billed as a presentation of the fictional Cornely University Drama Society. While the drama society is profoundly inept, the Mischief Theatre tour has the skill and flair of Monty Python regulars.

What follows is a kind of solved room mystery where anything that can happen will and even some阐释呢或将的 on the act. Early on an audience member (clearly chosen prior to curtain time) assists with a conveniently bodlesome part of designer Nigel Hook's smartly detailed mansion set.

Once the body of mansion host Charles Havesham appears, the Henny Lewis, Jonathan Sayer and Henry Shields laugh riot fully lives up to its title. Set pieces fall. The upper set area gradually deteriorates and fiber preciously. Peepo prove as mysterious as suspects. Acts end up in the wrong places. Some grandstand-looking out to the audience for attention is as though this is their first time onstage. Every Charles moves.

If the Corney effort seems bolder sketcher, unprepared, the Mischief ensemble — sharply honed by tour director Matt DiCarlo after the original Broadway direction of Mark Bell — possesses the disarming disorder of an apparently perfect murder. "The Play That Goes Wrong" may not have the verbal wit of "Noises Off," but audiences need not care (as was the case with the nostop laughter opening night).

Quite simply, the Mischief Theatre cast has the agility and flair of a Norman Lear or Bunter Kedron. Evan Alexander Smith has the proper air of authority as Inspector Carter. Angela Grovey as Corney actress Annie and Jamie Ann Romone as counterpart Sandra are equal hoots apart and especially together in a standout sequence. Ned Noyes displays impressive versatility by a quietly brother Cecil Havesham and einigmatious Arthur the Gardener.

Yarge F. Welch has the right elusive new as "mystery" victim Charles. The talented unsmiling also features Brandon Ellis, Peyton Cimin and Scott Cote.

Did the butler do it? Agatha Christie buffs are likely to figure out which of her mysteries this hilarious take-off resembles and the identity of the murderer. Everyone will warm to the production's spirited playfulness. It is no spoiler alert to reveal that "The Play That Goes Wrong" always goes right.
