Looking Back at 2020

Remembering Mart Crowley, Larry Kramer and Terrence McNally

By Jules Becker

Is social distance performance real theater? This question, of course, has informed virtually all stage efforts since the outbreak of COVID-19. Given the challenges of presenting split-screen and zoom productions, a best of the year list is unavoidably brief. Still, 2020 boasted some notable initial pre-COVID efforts and several following well-conceived presentations that provided online audiences with provocative fare until the re-opening of area theaters.

SpeakEasy Stage Company presented the Hub premiere of the tough-talking yet thoughtful street corner-set Off-Broadway drama "Pass

South End Writes

Filthy Labors by Lauren Marie Schmidt, Tuesday, January 26, 7:00 PM 8:00 PM

Lauren Marie Schmidt made her first appearance for South End Writes on July 14, 2020 when, during an event featuring her partner, the poet Martin Espada, she handed him their little fluffy dog while she searched the floor for an outlet to recharge a laptop being used in the poetry reading. The dog won a brief but decisive victory over poetry in the battle for audience attention.

Lauren Marie Schmidt will again join South End Writes to read from her latest collection, Filthy Labors, on Tuesday, January 26 at 7:00 PM. She will be introduced by Martin Espada. No word yet on whether the dog will make an appearance.

Boston Medical Center, COVID-19 Vaccine Update

From www.bmc.org

We now have a new way to help stop the spread of COVID-19—vaccines.

Vaccination will help protect you and those around you from COVID-19.

By being vaccinated, wearing a mask, and staying at least 6 ft. away from others, we can help end this pandemic.

As COVID infections go up in our communities, your risk of getting COVID-19 goes up too, and you can get seriously sick. But the COVID-19 vaccine prevents infections in about 95 percent of people. And it doesn't just protect you—by getting vaccinated, you'll also help keep your family and your community safe from COVID-19.

Currently, Boston Medical Center is providing the vaccine to hospital employees, based on state guidelines. We plan to begin vaccinating patients in early 2021, based on those guidelines. The vaccine will also be available at other health care organizations and pharmacies as part of the nation-wide vaccination effort. It will be available to different groups in phases. Your overall health and your job will help determine which phase you'll get the vaccine in. We expect that healthy adults will be able to get vaccines later in 2021.

We will continue to update this page as we learn more about COVID-19 vaccines.

Let's fight COVID-19 together.

Learn about how the COVID-19 vaccines work and when they might be available to you.

Over" (2019 Lortel best play prize). Antoinette Nuandu's timely play riffs on Beckett and Exodus in a resonant look at the frustrations and difficulties of two African-American young men. Hubens "Bobby" Cius was forceful as Kitch and Kadahj Bennett commanding as Moses. SpeakEasy has since tackled LGBTQ issues with an audio presentation of M.J.Halberstadt (the deservedly acclaimed "The Launch Prize")'s informative bookstore-set play "The Usual Unusual" —one that the company is likely to stage fully post-COVID.

American Repertory Theater paid tribute to 85 year old activist Gloria Steinem with an exuberant area premiere of the Emily Mann Off-Broadway play "Gloria." Audience members sat on pillows and bean bags as well as regular Loeb Drama Center seats for this informative if overly busy portrait of the Ms. Magazine founder, supporter of gay rights and inspiring contemporary of Shirley Chisholm and Bella Abzug. Patricia Kalember powerfully captured Steinem's fire and feeling.

Spring found the Hub Theatre Company of Boston bringing new zest to "Much Ado about Nothing" in a lively split-screen revival. Jon Vellante was a standout as Benedick in a solid ensemble. Veteran actor Arthur Waldstein —wearing a tallit (Jewish prayer shawl) and yarmulke —proved very affecting as Rabbi Francis (originally, of course, Friar Francis) in director Bryn Boice's persuasive adaptation.

New Repertory Theatre began a project called the Showstopper Virtual Play Series with back to back on-line one person one-act plays. Colombian-American playwright Alexis Scheer's "A Very Herrera Holiday" impressed with a disarming Martha Stewart-like crafts show that eventually darkened via suspicions of the host about the fidelity of her husband. The second work, Miranda ADEkoje's Instagram-employing "[keyp-ing]," builds on the worries of an African-American producer's about the security of her director husband and fellow black film crew members testing for COVID in a virtually all-white community. This smart Zoom duo bodes well for New Rep's commitment to diversity.

Arlekin Players continues to show itself to be an envelope-pushing troupe. If its one-woman trial-based drama "State vs. Natasha Banina" needed stronger development and fuller back story, the company nevertheless deserves kudos for a well-acted, technically imaginative effort.

Three pioneering gay playwrights were lost to America and the world in 2020-Mart Crowley (84), Larry Kramer (84) and Terrence McNally (at 81 from complications from COVID 19).

Crowley's pre-Stonewall "The Boys in the Band" (1968) broke ground for dramatists seeking to focus on the fortunes of gay characters. Theatergoers can catch a film version of the Tony Award-winning 2018 revival (complete with the entire Broadway cast) on Netflix. Kramer's Tony-winning play "The Normal Heart" (powerfully staged on Broadway) combines a touching romance in the age of AIDS, insights about activists like the playwright himself and timely comment about politicians favoring opportunism over courage and caring.

Terrence McNally (whom this critic was privileged to meet at a talkback after a stellar SpeakEasy Stage Company production of his Off-Broadway gem "A Man of No Importance") was rightly known as "the bard of American theater." The multi-talented writer and opera aficionado won Tony's for plays – "Love!Valour!Compassion!" and "Master Class"–as well as the books of musicals —"Kiss of the Spider Woman" and "Ragtime."

Surely the works of all three —particularly the prolific McNally —will remain an essential part of American stage repertoire.

The following industries in the City of Boston are allowed to remain open with the following restrictions in place for at least three weeks (January 27, 2021):

No member of any dining party may remain in a restaurant for more than 90 minutes in any calendar day. Ancillary activities such as pool tables, darts, trivia, etc. are prohibited.

• Bar seating is prohibited unless express written approval is issued by Boston's Licensing Board, after licensees submit a Bar Seating Plan for review and approval.

• Close contact personal services may remain open at 25 percent capacity (workers and staff are excluded from the occupancy count.)

• Places of worship may remain open at 25 percent capacity (workers and staff are excluded from the occupancy count.)

• Retail businesses may remain open at 25 percent capacity (workers and staff are excluded from the occupancy count.)

• Golf facilities may remain open at 25 percent capacity (for indoor spaces)

• Temporary capacity and gathering limits: 10 persons indoors and 25 persons outdoors for both private homes and event venues and public spaces.

• Face coverings order: face masks or cloth face coverings are required in all public places, whether indoors or outdoors, even where they are able to maintain 6 feet of distance from others.

and Sunday, February 6th and 7th, 11am-5pm, live streaming on Facebook from the artists' studios at 450 Harrison Ave in Boston's SoWa Art and Design District.

Debby Krim, an artist in the building, will take on the role of filmmaker and shoot live footage of all participating artists. Viewers can participate live from home, ask questions, contact individual artists and make purchases. They simply need to go to the "SOWA Artists Guild" Facebook page. https://www.facebook.com/SowaArtistsGuild

"We had such success with Facebook Live in November," says SoWa artist Paul Pedulla, "reaching thousands of viewers, answering some wonderful questions and selling work. So we just had to do it again."

Facebook users can participate live and/or continue to view some compelling and spontaneous video footage for days and weeks to follow.

"We're keeping art alive, even for people who are in their homes," explains Stephen Silver, Founder of the SoWa Artists Guild. Another SoWa artist, Audrey Markoff, adds, "it's a fun way to bring some of Boston's best art directly into art lovers' homes on a chilly winter weekend."

Depending on state protocols, 450 Harrison Ave may also be open for in-person participation at the February 6th and 7th event with masks required. One way or another, SoWa artists will continue to greet the public.

"The Resisters" by Gish Jen

Tuesday, February 2, 7:00 PM 8:30 PM

Gish Jen, the acclaimed author of many novels, short stories and thought-provoking essays, has agreed to return to South End Writes to discuss her widely praised eighth novel, The Resisters, on Tuesday, February 2, via ZOOM.

Jen visited the South End library in 2017 to present her earlier work of fiction, The Girl at the Baggage Claim: Explaining the East-West Culture Gap.

The first paragraph in the New York Times review of The Resisters describes a searing picture of a world we hope we will never see but which conceptually appears increasingly close at hand: The Resisters " … imagines a society even more catastrophically divided than our own. In Jen's AutoAmerica, almost all of the jobs have been automated and rising seas have swamped large sections of the country. The privileged, known as the "Netted," have "angelfair" skin and live on high ground, while the "Surplus," whose skin is often "coppertoned," suffer on swampland and rickety houseboats…"
