Boston's District 7 Election Shows Why We Need Ranked Choice Voting

BY EDWYN SHOEMAKER

Boston's recent District 7 preliminary was a perfect reminder of why we need Ranked Choice Voting (RCV) in our city elections. Eleven candidates ran. The top two squeaked by with less than a third of the vote combined. The third-place finisher missed advancing by just 17 votes and has already called for a recount. That's not a recipe for

Primary Trust

SpeakEasy Stage has auspiciously opened its 35th season with an equally sharp and affecting staging of this clever work by the company's new artistic director Dawn M. Simmons. Some theatergoers may wonder where Kenneth's imaginary friendship is leading him, but Booth eventually reveals a convincing explanation for what appears to be a dependence on fantasy.

For much of "Primary Trust," 38-year-old Kenneth spends as much time drinking mai tais at Wally's, a local tiki bar in Cranberry—the play's upstate New York setting. In the insecure protagonist struggling to deal with the sudden decision of his employer Sam—for whom he has worked for almost 20 years to sell his bookstore. If his reliance on his curious relationship with Bert does not overcome a deep-seated insecurity, meeting a kind barista named Corrina not only results in a real friendship but also leads Kenneth serendipitously to a new position working at a bank with the same name as the play's title. Will Kenneth be able to trust his feelings for Corrina and appreciate the kindness of patient bank manager Clay? Playwright Booth makes Kenneth's emotional and psychological odyssey very compelling.

Under Simmons' strong direction, David J. Castillo captures Kenneth's initial diffidence and his growing confidence with Corrina and Clay. Arthur Gomez has all of the personality and exuberance as Bert that Kenneth perceives in him. Castillo and Gomez's scenes together have all of the persuasive feel of a real friendship. Luis Negrón as Sam's resignation about closing the bookstore and Clay's big-heartedness as Kenneth's understanding employer. Best of all is Janelle Grace—who smoothly moves from playing captivating Corrina to distinctly capturing a variety of bank customers.

SpeakEasy's very appealing area premiere of "Primary Trust" should make audiences smile as much as Kenneth does at the end of the play. You can bank on it.

Voting

voter confidence.

What Boston's Home Rule Petition would do is simple: instead of sending just two candidates to the general election, four would advance. That means far more voters would see their preferred candidate on the November ballot, giving them more reason to turn out. And by allowing voters to rank those four options in the general election, RCV would ensure the winner reflects the majority will of the people.

We've seen this movie before. In 2013, the top two in the mayor's race had just 36% combined. If four had advanced, 61% of voters would've seen their pick in the general. In 2017, District 7 finalists barely cleared a third of the vote. In 2021, moving forward four would have given 95% of voters their preferred candidate in November. And now, in 2025, District 7 is déjà vu: 70 percent of voters backed candidates who won't even appear on the general ballot.

It's time to break the cycle. The Legislature should act on what Boston has already done — an 8-4 City Council vote and the Mayor's signature sending the Home Rule Petition forward — and pair it with the RCV Local Option Bill [S.531].

Together, these measures would finally give Boston and other cities the tool to adopt ranked choice voting. Our voters deserve elections where every voice is heard and every vote counts.

Edwyn Shoemaker, is the Executive Director at Voter Choice MA

Heroes are Dana-Farber patients who provide inspiration and motivation to walkers along the course. Heroes are matched with Jimmy Fund Walk teams who walk in their honor. Thayer was diagnosed with Langerhans cell histiocytosis. He is matched with his family's team Thayer the Cancer Slayer.

"I love the Jimmy Fund Clinic because they took good care of me," Thayer says. "They helped me become a cancer survivor!"

"For 36 years, the Jimmy Fund Walk has been a cornerstone of support for life-saving cancer research and patient care at Dana-Farber," said Caitlin Fink, vice president of The Jimmy Fund.

"Every participant contributes directly to advancing lifesaving research and critically important cancer care. Walk Day is more than just an event—it's a celebration of hope and the shared commitment of the Jimmy Fund community."

One Walk, Four Distances, For All Cancers

The Jimmy Fund Walk takes place along the famed Boston Marathon® course, and participants have the flexibility to choose from four distance options: 5K walk (from Dana-Farber's Longwood Medical Campus); 10K walk (from Newton); Half Marathon walk (from Wellesley); and Marathon walk (from Hopkinton). Walkers who prefer to participate virtually can complete their chosen distance from any location.

VICE PRESIDENT OF THE
JIMMY FUND

Whatever route participants choose, they will be supported by hundreds of volunteers and treated to refueling stations with refreshments throughout the course. Walkers will be motivated by poster-sized photographs of Walk Heroes that appear along the course as inspiration. All routes will conclude at the Jimmy Fund Walk Finish Line Powered by Schneider Electric at Boston Common, by the corner of Charles and Beacon Street. Finish line activities will include a celebration with food, entertainment, and more.

To register for the Walk (#JimmyFundWalk) or to support a walker, visit www.JimmyFundWalk.org or call 866-531-9255. Registrants can enter the promo code NEWS for $5 off the registration fee. All registered walkers will receive a bib, medal, and a Jimmy Fund Walk T-shirt. You can also sign up to volunteer on Walk day.

The Mountaintop

his April 4, 1968 assassination, this moving two-character play strikingly focuses on the great civil rights leader's humanity. As the Front Porch Arts Collective revival opens at Suffolk University's Modern Theatre, MLK is awaiting the arrival of friend and confidant Ralph Abernathy at Memphis' Lorraine Motel during a thunderstorm. Earlier the great leader had spoken to municipal sanitation workers. Curiously, Hall—a Memphis native herself—portrays King as a human being "warts and all." To this end, she has the famed preacher removing his shoes to reveal both foot odor and socks with holes. These details become emblematic of his normalcy.

Quite soon a spunky hotel maid named Camae (a name with which playwright Hall pays tribute to her own mother, who regretted not attending King's Memphis speech) enters and proceeds to move from her duties at his Room 306 to an ongoing discussion and debate about the needs and concerns of black Americans as well as the methods used in protest. There are telling moments in which King and Malcolm X—both identified as 39—are contrasted in terms of the former's appeal to love and the latter's frequent focus on hate. Eventually Camae discloses that she is a novice angel meant to escort King to heaven. In a particularly humorous moment, Hall has Camae referred to God as a female who seems to hang up on King when he insists that he needs to lead the people to the Promised Land. As Camae leads King to the title future vantage point, a quick survey of people and events stretching to current times—brilliantly projected by designer Pamela Hersch—follows.

Multiple talent Maurice Emmanuel Parent tightly directs Hall's fascinating 90 minute, no intermission play. Dominic Carter captures both the dynamism and the vulnerability of

During the vision of the future, a slogan "The baton passes on" is repeated as a kind of rallying cry.

King. Carter is particularly riveting as King struggles to understand Camae's point of view and perspective as a woman. Kiera Prusmack catches Camae's atypical responses as a hotel worker and convincingly moves from her employment to her new responsibilities as an angel. Carter and Prusmack make their exchanges absorbing and arresting. Kudos also go to Brian Lilienthal's vivid lighting and Joshua Jackson's often thunderous sound design during the ongoing storm.

During the vision of the future, a slogan "The baton passes on" is repeated as a kind of rallying cry. This critic found Hall's intriguing play quite memorable in an Underground Railway Theater staging at the Central Square Theater in 2013. The even stronger Front Porch effort rates a very hearty "Amen."

Commission

said Mayor Michelle Wu. “The Commission has helped shape our initiatives and focus across city departments, and I’m grateful to the outgoing Commission members for their leadership and service to our city. I look forward to working with our new Commissioners and our Office of Black Male Advancement as we continue to build on Boston’s progress.”

“The Black Men and Boys Commission plays a crucial role in ensuring Mayor Michelle Wu’s vision for a more equitable Boston is realized,” said Frank Farrow, Executive Director of the Mayor’s Office of Black Male Advancement. “I want to thank all of the past and current commissioners who have laid the groundwork for our progress, and I’m excited to work with the newest members of the Commission. Together, we will engage residents and continue our collective work to reduce systemic barriers to advancement for Black men and boys living in our city.”

“The Black Men and Boys Commission continues to guide how the City shows up for the community,” said Mariangely Solís Cervera, Chief of Equity & Inclusion. “Their perspective strengthens our work with the Office of Black Male Advancement, and I look forward to supporting the new and returning members in advancing opportunities for Black men and boys across Boston.”

The Commission has worked with Mayor Wu to codify the Office of Black Male Advancement to ensure Black men and boys have equitable access to opportunities in the City. The Black Men and Boys Commission along with city departments has helped to shape city initiatives, with priority recommendations for investment in education, housing, health, safety and economic opportunity. This includes Boston Public Schools’ expanded funding for My Brother’s Keeper Boston, financial literacy and African American studies pilots, and strengthening the male educators of color pipeline; increased housing supports for emerging developers and first time homebuyers; new mental health and father-friendly initiatives through the Boston Public Health Commission alongside greater partnership with BMBC; creation of the Office of Violence Prevention and increased capacity to support the city’s community safety efforts; and the launch of a White Stadium Supplier Diversity Advisory Committee to boost MWBE participation to 50% for the project.

In partnership with the Boston City Council and the Black Men and Boys Commission, the Office of Black Male Advancement launched the first ever Equity Study for Black men and boys, which aims to detail, quantify, and evaluate the prevalence, significance, and scope of inequities impacting Black men and boys in the city. Phase one of the study, led by Turry Research Institute, will gather data to better understand how the City’s service delivery impacts the social and economic conditions of Black males in Boston. This includes an Equity Survey which focuses on identifying the most pressing challenges and opportunities facing Black males in Boston. The survey is open to Black men and boys living in Boston and is accepting responses through Friday, October 31, 2025.

“The Black Men and Boys Equity Study will give us the data we need to turn lived experience into policy,” said City Councilor Brian Worrell (District 4), who helped secure FY25 funding for the study. “Black men often shoulder challenges in silence; this Commission will help translate those realities into resources and results.”

“As the author of the legislation that created the Black Men and Boys Commission, serving as its Chair has been both a privilege and a calling,” said Tito Jackson, Chair Emeritus of the Black Men and Boys Commission and former District 7 City Councilor. “This work has never been about titles—it’s about transforming systems, opening doors, and affirming the worth and brilliance of every Black man and boy in our city. Together, we have fought to shift the narrative from deficit to possibility, from survival to thriving. I am profoundly proud of what we’ve built in partnership with Mayor Wu and the Office of Black Male Advancement—the investments made, the programs launched, and the hope restored. As I pass the torch, I do so knowing that this movement will continue to grow, led by a powerful and intergenerational group of leaders determined to ensure that equity and justice are not just aspirations, but lived realities for Black men and boys in Boston. As go Black men and boys in Boston, so goes the City of Boston.”
