

Pine Street Inn Serves Over 2,000 Thanksgiving Meals with Help from Familiar Boston Faces

BY SOUTH END NEWS STAFF

Some familiar faces helped keep a special Thanksgiving tradition alive at Pine Street Inn on Thursday, serving more than 2,000 holiday meals to Bostonians in need.

Mayor Michelle Wu, Senator Ed Markey, and Boston Bruins defenseman Nikita Zadorov rolled up their sleeves alongside volunteers to distribute the Thanksgiving spread. Zadorov even brought dessert to share with guests.

The effort brought the commu-

Alison Bechdel turned her memories of family life in rural Pennsylvania into a provocative 2006 graphic novel entitled "Fun Home." The acclaimed memoir focused on her own development from child to college student to fully adult woman and her evolving relationship with her complicated father. In 2013, composer Jeanine Tesori (of "Caroline, or Change" fame) and author-lyricist Lisa Kron ("2-1/2 Miles") brought her graphic novel narrative to rich theatrical life Off-Broadway and eventually took their Obie Award musical to Broadway—where it won well deserved

Third Arrest Made in October South End Street Takeover

BY SOUTH END NEWS STAFF

Boston Police announced the arrest of a Connecticut teenager in connection with an early-morning street takeover in the South End two months ago that resulted in a police cruiser being set on fire.

A 19-year-old of Norwalk, Connecticut, was arrested at his home early Thursday morning and faces charges of burning of a motor vehicle, unlawful possession of fireworks, disturbing the peace, and conspiracy, according to Boston Police.

The incident occurred around 2:30 a.m. on October 5 at the intersection of Massachusetts Avenue and Tremont Street in the South End, according to a Boston Police Department report. More than 100 people blocked the intersection and engaged in illegal street racing and driving donuts, police said.

When officers arrived at the scene, members of the group threw traffic cones, poles and other objects at police, according to the BPD report. People jumped on the hood of a police cruiser, which was then struck by fireworks and set ablaze.

The suspect is the third person arrested in connection with the incident. Two Rhode Island teenagers—William Cantwell, 19, of Warwick, and Julian Bowers, 18, of Cumberland—were arrested at the time and charged with destruction of property, assault and battery on a police officer and related charges.

"You can't come to Boston and think you're going to be involved in criminal behavior and it's going to be tolerated," Boston Police Superintendent-in-Chief Phil Owens said at a press conference Thursday, according to the Boston Herald. "Do not do it. You'll be held accountable, and this is a perfect example of people being held accountable."

Boston Police Superintendent Paul

McLaughlin described the investigation as "very intense" and "painstaking," involving a review of hours of body camera footage from the South End incident and other street takeovers that occurred earlier that night outside the city, as well as social media documentation and tips from the public.

McLaughlin said the investigation revealed what he characterized as a "very organized street takeover network" operating throughout New England and beyond.

The suspect was scheduled to be arraigned in Connecticut court on charges of being a fugitive from justice before being extradited to face charges in Roxbury Municipal Court.

The Norwalk CT Police Department, Randolph Police, Massachusetts State Police, the National Insurance Crime Bureau, the Suffolk County District Attorney's Office and the Stamford/Norwalk Judicial State Attorney's Office assisted in the investigation.

The investigation remains active and ongoing. Anyone with information about the incident is asked to contact Boston Police detectives at (617) 343-5619 or the anonymous CrimeStoppers tip line.

Theater

2015 Tony Awards for the show as well as its collaborators. Now Huntington Theatre is doing full justice to Bechdel's insightful memoir and this very thoughtful show in a fresh and forceful staging by Logan Ellis.

Undaunted by the musical's challenging division of the focal memoirist into three roles—namely Small Alison, Medium Alison and (fully grown up) Alison, Ellis artfully moves the narrating adult Alison in and around the ample Huntington stage so that her on-going presence never seems distracting. In fact, as the show begins with the cartoon artist's work desk at center stage, Alison—played with convincing candor and warmth by Sarah Bockel—immediately establishes this distinctive work as a musical memoir that chronicles both her happy and dark days. Bockel's remarkable performance includes strong attention to the very different experiences of Small Alison and Medium Alison. While the musical finale bears the striking title "Flying Away," early on Alison recalls the childhood fun of having her father Bruce lift and balance her on his feet as if on an airplane.

Throughout the no-intermission musical (100 minutes in length), narrator Alison makes a rivetingly earnest effort to understand her father as well as herself. On the one hand, Bruce is a multi-talent—a high school English teacher, a restorer of furniture and a funeral home director—the last the source of the musical's seemingly quirky title. At the same time, her closeted father attempts to deal with a disturbing need to meet up with various young men—including a yard worker named Roy—with regular therapy. As a college student at Oberlin, Medium Alison finally comes to the realization that she is a lesbian—one who will both continue to love her father and confront his identity crisis. Although Alison reveals at an early moment that her father has committed suicide, the power of Lisa Kron's book and the poignancy of the Kron – Tesori score should make audience members feel as though they are joining Alison in her difficult but rewarding search for individual and family truths.

Under Logan Ellis' sharp direction, a first-rate cast makes "Fun Home" as moving in its own way as the original production that this critic saw at New York's Circle in the Square in 2015. Nick Duckart captures Bruce's conflicted emotions and motivations with arresting pathos—much as Michael Cerveris did in his brilliant Tony Award performance. In addition to Bockel's touching work as Alison, Lyla Randall as Small Alison and Maya Jacobson as Medium Alison are equally persuasive. Budding talent Randall may have theatergoers on the verge of tears during her standout delivery of a vivid number entitled "Ring of Keys"—in which she fondly remembers a butch delivery woman. Jacobson brings compelling naivete to Medium Alison as she opens herself up to an adventurous relationship with a very personable fellow student named Joan—played with winning directness by Sushma Saha.

In what is arguably the musical's finest number "Days and Days," Jennifer Ellis deeply explores the frustrations of Bruce's understandably needy wife Helen. Wyatt Anton provides distinct characterizations as Roy and the other men that Bruce encounters. Hearty praise goes to Taavon Gamble for properly high energy and wide-ranging choreography, Jessie Rosso for spirited musical direction and Tanya Orellana for a bold scenic design in which Bruce's library bookcase virtually reaches the Huntington's rafters.

Fun Home proved to be a breakthrough study of family dynamics and individual orientation in 2015. Huntington's heartfelt staging brings welcome resonance to Alison Bechdel's singular memoir and the musical's enduring impact.
