Advice on Pets, Life, Love

BY MONICA COLLINS

Dear Dog Lady,

My boyfriend of seven years and I have split up. We have an English bulldog, Bunco, together. The dog will be two in September. My "ex" put down the money to purchase Bunco so technically the dog is his. We have agreed to share him equally since I am so attached. My question: Is it good for the dog to go back and forth? My ex is not home a lot and I was the main care giver for Bunco. I just worry that he will be left alone too much and he will get depressed. This is why we have agreed to share. But, do you think he will adjust and be OK? I want what is best for him, but I also don't want to give up seeing him.

-Chelsea

Dear Chelsea,
For all their OCD tendencies, dogs are surprisingly elastic creatures. They bend around circumstances. Dogs also love indiscriminately. If your "ex" cares about Bunco as much as you do, put aside human emotions and try not to worry the dog will be depressed. Bunco will adjust.

Since you agree to share Bunco equally, you should step up to make sure the dog receives outings during the day to relieve himself and to exercise. Also, ensure Bunco has a comfortable den to hang out when alone. Insert yourself so you are still responsible for his well-being. This is what sharing a dog entails as both parties have an equal say in how the dog is tended. Make sure you agree to use the same veterinarian. Bunco will enjoy the benefits of friends, which you and your ex should remain for the sake of the bulldog.

Dear Dog Lady,

I have been an animal person all my life. I grew up with four different cats but have always wanted a dog. Now that I'm 29 and stable and in a place where I can devote enough time to a dog I'm wondering which of the following breeds would be the best suited to my conditions. I am currently looking for a one or two bedroom apartment with no yard per se but I want there to be a nearby outdoor area. I want to be able to walk/exercise the dog at least once a day if not more often. I'm willing to groom the dog once or twice a week. I want a mid-sized to large dog with a long thick coat.

The dog breeds I'm most interested in are (in this order): 1: Samoyed 2: Siberian Husky 3: Collie (not Border) 4: Newfoundland 5: Labrador Retriever 6: Golden Retriever. Which of these dog breeds are best for a first-time dog owner who is generally great with animals? Most dogs tend to love me. I'm also looking for the most affectionate type of dog. I'm really interested in the first three breed options due to their aesthetic quality and beauty.

Dear Adam,

Dogs are not super-models. Do not select a dog for looks. Choose for temperament and adaptability to your lifestyle. From the details you provide, any of the breeds you mention would be a bad fit. A Samoyed trapped in a one bedroom apartment would be stifled by the lack of outdoor space to sprawl. Samoyeds and Siberian Huskies need cool air, cold water, and epic walks across the tundra. Collies require romps in fields of green. Newfoundlands crave the outdoors. Even in a blizzard, a Newfie can park itself under a tree and refuse to budge. You have not done your research about the needs of these large breeds – and let's not even mention how your apartment will become a den of dander and fluff if you insist on grooming by yourself.

Great you want a dog but, please, do more homework. Visit a shelter (the Animal Rescue League or MSPCA/Angell, for starters) and look for a smaller dog requiring less maintenance.

Dear Dog Lady,

This guy I've been seeing for a few months surprised me and gave me a live dog for my birthday, a Pomeranian he named Scooter. I was very annoyed he handed me this responsibility. I never asked for a dog and I'm still deciding whether I want to keep it. I know I want to dump the guy. Surprising someone with a dog is not a nice thing to do. Right?

-Brittany

Dear Brittany,

Double right. Dog Lady hears you and seconds that emotion. And, speaking of emotions, the fellow who gave you the dog was not considering your feelings when he gave you the outrageous gift. Shocking someone with a hairy heap of responsibility – no matter how cute – is a bad break for all involved – the recipient, the hapless critter caught in the middle, and the giver. You may learn to love the dog; unfortunately, the guy not so much. This extravagant gesture seems to have sunk his chances.

People, remember, you should never give anyone a dog – unless you are totally prepared and eager to take care of the dog yourself.

his parents' examples. As a young adult, he owned and operated an ice cream store founded with his mother and siblings in Revere, and later worked as an aide to Mayor Menino in the Office of Neighborhood Services (ONS). Now Kelley is hoping to succeed Bill Linehan as District 2 city councillor.

"I've been around a long time, but this is my first time as a candidate. This is all new to me," Michael Kelley said of his first campaign for elected office over coffee at the South End Buttery on Shawmut Avenue. Kelley is making the rounds to meet the voters in South Boston, Bay Village and the South End, where he lived for 25 years. His approach is intensely personal: he attends community meetings and social events, shaking hands, introducing himself and listening to people's hopes and priorities.

He admits that he doesn't have a laundry list of policy proposals in mind, but is sifting through his own experience as a city resident and public servant as well as the input he is gathering from constituents to inform his priorities as a councillor.

"I have an idea of the issues I want to work on and what I want to happen, but specific policy proposals will take time. What I am doing now is sitting down with people about all these different issues and saying 'How do you think we should do this?'" Kelley explained. In revealing himself to residents, he talks a lot about his foundation in life: his family. "I talk about my parents a lot. We are a close-knit family and that's a big part of who I am."

Having lost his father in February 2016, one day after moving into the Bay Village house that he purchased with husband, Ricardo Rodriguez, Kelley is still coping with the loss and often breaks the ice with humor before delving into the now bittersweet topic of his family. "I can't talk about who I am without it, but if I start right out with it... it takes me a while to get ready," he said.

While a hefty chunk of District 2 is in South Boston and two of his four opponents, Ed Flynn and Corey Dinopoulos as well as incumbent Bill Linehan are deeply rooted in Southie, Kelley brings a South End sensibility to the race, giving more of a voice for a neighborhood that is split into three separate city council districts, none of them represented by South End residents.

Well before his March 30 campaign kick-off party, which packed the Villa Victoria Center for the Arts on W. Newton Street, Kelley began making the New End social rounds, meeting residents at the Get Tapped benefit for the Peters Park Art Wall, the Castle Square Tenants Organization's Chinese New Year and Black History Month celebration, calling bingo at the Art Connection's April 29 Art Bingo fundraiser and the addressing the May meeting of the Blackstone/Franklin continue to keep a cycle of sharing and learning best practices for that work is through our bi-annual Expansion Summit, which gathers grant recipients from The Fay Slover Fund at The Boston Foundation. While the grantees come from places like Kentucky, New York, Seattle, Chicago, and even Italy, everyone was able to convene in the South End at Castle Square Tenants Organization on Friday, May 19, to talk about ways to keep art accessible, especially for those who lack resources in under-served communities.

In addition to being one of the most beloved partners and neighbors, Castle Square Tenants Organization has been a recipient of two placements for over 38 works of art from The Art Connection. One of the highlights of having them host the 2017 Expansion Summit was allowing attendees to tour their facilities with their staff Debbie Campbell and Irene Chan. Attendees were also able to tour Tufts Medical Center's Mammography Department, where one of the grantees, Healing Photo Arts has placed colorful nature photography to uplift the spirits of all who inhabit the space. This group places photographs in hospitals around the world.

To round out the perspectives present, local art donors Prilla Smith Brackett and Maria Termini shared their experiences as artists and touched upon the gratitude felt when they experience the positivity their art infuses into social service agencies. After a full day of sharing the triumphs and challenges of collaboration, systems, and fundraising to sustain arts access, there was an opportunity to cut loose at an after party, hosted by The Art Connection Board Member Susan Bradley,

Square Neighborhood Association (B/FSNA) to name a few.

Kelley's love and loyalty for the South End stems from the acceptance he found here. Having moved into the neighborhood with two roommates in 1991, he sometimes struggled to scrape together his $230 share of the rent, a consequence of poor money management and unsteady shift work.

Kelley reflected happily on his 2005 wedding in Hayes Park to Rodriguez, his partner of 21 years. Becoming frustrated with trying to plan a traditional wedding, the pair decided to have an impromptu ceremony in Hayes Park and called everyone to let them know. "Whoever could make it was there," he said. The couple and their guests marched through the streets from their apartment to the park, unsure of how they would be received by bystanders. "Walking down the street, everyone whooped and hollered and cheered for us, even some people who were a little rough-looking. It was so wonderful," he reminisced.

An anecdote from his mother's business experience influenced both Kelley's commitment to fairness and his approach to dealing with people to accomplish a goal. He recalled his mother sometimes letting her husband speak for her in situations involving her ice cream shop because male bankers and other professionals would not deal directly with a woman.

"That was a lesson for me in how wrong it is to treat people differently. It's a concept I don't even understand. If I had the opportunity, stuff like that would never happen," Kelley said. Yet he saw in the experience a strategy for prevailing in situations with difficult adversaries. "My mother is a strong woman. In determining when to fight and how to fight, my mother sometimes spoke through my father to get things done."

One area in which Kelley follows in the footsteps of former boss, Mayor Menino: a strong focus on constituent services. "I think that as a city councilor, you have to be committed to and enjoy the nuts and bolts of constituent services. You have to want to make sure the lights are on, the streets are paved, you need to be available so that people know they can rely on you as their first line of defense in getting things done. I am a constituent services and quality-of-life person. I love that stuff." Among his achievements as ONS South End Liaison, Kelley organized a committee that raised funds and sponsored Movies on the Diamond, a summer movie series for children and teens in the baseball field at Peters Park. Although the series came under the B-Smart city initiative, it began with private funds and donations that the committee raised.

In planning community and business development, Kelley favors community master planning that includes all of the stakeholders: community members, local businesses, local and elected officials and developers working together to plan development projects. Asked about an idea suggested in a recent Ellis South End Neighborhood Association women's gathering to require that new developments with retail space include affordable retail spaces for local businesses, Kelley said, "I think there could be some legal issues to mandating [small-business space allocations] unless you have some city or state investment or it's on government owned land. However, I think it is something that is absolutely possible if people come together on priorities and what we value and [act] as a unified force when developments come."

"When you talk about development, I believe that one of the most important things is to have a community master plan with lots of stakeholders: the community, businesses, local and elected officials come together," he added.

Kelley also expressed concern for the number of people being squeezed out of the South End by housing prices. "I think if we make it a priority, we can improve and build upon the number of affordable units we are building. It's going to take a lot of work and pulling people together and doing things we have never done before; creating partnerships, looking at best practices," he said. "I don't have all the answers, but I think we are a really smart city with smart people and institutions and we can do this."

MooMoo is an energetic and friendly youngster who is looking for an active family to call his own. He is likely to be the type of cat that follows you everywhere, wanting to be in every room you are in. MooMoo is quite playful, but he can get over-stimulated very easily and can sometimes play rough, (using his claws and teeth to give love bites) so he would likely do best in a home with cat savvy people. For this reason he will likely not be a good match for children, as this behavior can sometimes be overwhelming for small kids. MooMoo does not like dogs and probably would do best as the only animal in the home. If you think MooMoo might be a good match for you, please plan a visit to our shelter today or call 617.226.5602. The shelter is open Tuesday through Thursday 1-7pm & Friday through Sunday 1-4pm, excluding some holidays.
