

Seniors protest program closing at USES Neighborhood Gala

By MICHELE D. MANISCALCO

Guests arriving at the Harriet Tubman House, 566 Columbus Avenue, for the United South End Settlements Neighborhood Gala beginning at 6:00 PM on Wednesday, May 24 had to cross a picket line to enter the benefit, as participants in the USES senior programs, their friends and relatives protested the end of senior services there, which is scheduled for June 30.

Guests greeted friends on the picket line warmly as the protesters carried signs reading "Save Our Seniors", "Seniors Lives Matter" and

"Seniors are the roots of the Harriet Tubman Center community" and chanted similar slogans. The closure of the senior programs is part of a shift in focus stemming from Vision125, a new strategic plan that has been in

USES forges ahead at Neighborhood Gala

By MICHELE D. MANISCALCO

This year's United South End Settlements Neighborhood Gala, which transformed the Harriet Tubman House at 566 Columbus Avenue into a fine-dining bazaar and glitzy dance club, celebrated the organization's 125 years of service to the community, unveiled a new direction for its future and surpassed the fundraising total of the previous year's Gala by an impressive margin while showcasing the South End's rich diversity of cuisine and providing a festive evening for guests.

Crash at Tremont and Union Park

By SUE O'CONNELL

A man hit by a car on Monday night died from his injuries, according to the Boston Police. The crash happened about 8:30 pm near 571 Tremont Street near Union Park.

The driver of the car involved in the crash stayed at the scene. The victim was taken to the hospital where he was pronounced dead, according to the police.

Boston's new default speed limit is 25 mph.

Unless otherwise posted, the speed limit on all City of Boston roadways will be 25 mph.

Protest Program

development since the fall of last year. USES will concentrate its focus on helping families with children to "disrupt the cycle of poverty", according to a blog post on the plan by USES president and CEO Maicharia Weir-Lytle.

Rumors of the discontinuance began circulating in senior classes last month and were confirmed on April 27 meeting when Weir-Lytle and vice president of development Nikki Stewart met with senior participants. While USES leadership has begun working with city and private agencies to relocate USES's senior services, continuation of the programming beyond July 1 has not yet been announced.

Lois Cato King and Debra Cato, represented their mother, 91-year-old Lois Cato, at the protest. The elder Lois Cato is a regular participant in USES senior programs, as is Cato King's mother-in-law, Joyce King, who is a member of the senior yoga class.

"This is one of the very few things she can do to get out of the house and still have a social life and creativity outside of the home," Cato King explained. "She was one of the early pioneers and we both came here as children."

Cato King got involved in the recycled-art program, which creates doll furniture, bags and other items that are sold to benefit USES children's programs, at her mother's urging. The elder Mrs. Cato has also benefited from USES's affordable home repair services for seniors.

Rachel Silva, who has participated in the USES senior programs since 2009, enjoys the exercise classes, the art class and is a member of the Platinum Singers. Reacting to the discontinuation of the senior programs, Silva said, "It's devastation. It's a tragedy. I am crushed; I am in mourning, as are a lot of other people. They didn't involve the community at all it was a decision made by the board and the Director."

Nan Donovan has been coming to USES senior activities since she moved from Revere to the South End 10 years ago, singing with the Platinum Singers and taking art and exercise classes. She described the USES elder activities as "Absolutely awesome. I made the best friends; I made so many wonderful friends here. As soon as I moved to Boston I started coming."

Detailing some of her personal highlights, Donovan said, "Clady's exercise group: she's amazing. If she doesn't kill you, she'll cure you.

The singing group, the meal site, just about everything." She added, "I'm 72 and I can get around, but there are so many seniors who come to the meal site here every day who are in their 80s or early 90s. They're telling them, 'you can go to Grove Hall or Jamaica Plain.' These people have lived here all their lives. They are not going to go to Grove Hall. I'm not going to go to Grove Hall." Donovan and other protesters cited the difficulty for elders with poor health, mobility impairments and cognitive decline to find their way to a new destination in another part of town. "We need a real senior center right here," Donovan said.

Inside the gala, Lisa Jenks, co-chair of the Blackstone/Franklin Square Neighborhood Association's scholarship committee and a neighbor of the Tubman House reflected on the picketing at the entrance. "I thought it was too bad that they decided to do that tonight, but I understand they wanted to get everyone's attention. I'm sure they feel badly that the program they love is being cut. It's unfortunate that it's the first thing you see when you come to a festive event, but it's really hard to make everybody happy. I understand why they did it."

USES Forges Ahead

New beginnings often come with growing pains, and those were manifested in a demonstration that greeted guests to this year's gala, in which 18 people carrying signs and chanting "Save Our Seniors" protested the closing of USES's well-loved senior activities and services effective June 30, pointing out that there is no other senior center or program in the South End.

Under Vision125, a new strategic plan formulated over the past 6 months through talks with community members, local and elected officials and other stakeholders, will focus USES's efforts on helping young families and children to rise out of poverty and improve educational and employment prospects for the future and disengage from services to elderly South Enders.

Over 400 people paid $125 per ticket to eat, drink, dance and hear about USES's achievements and goals at the four-hour fundraiser. According to USES vice president of development Nikki Stewart, "Advance ticket sales were very good. We had to expand the size of the event this year because it sold out for the last two years, so we opened up a tent in the parking lot, which gave us capacity for about 120 extra people."

Guests at the gala included District 7 city councilor and mayoral hopeful Tito Jackson; state representative Byron Rushing and his wife, former USES executive director Frieda Garcia; District 7 city council candidate Deeqo Jibril and Boston Police Department officer Jorge Dias, a popular face in D-4 for his dedication and indefatigable generosity as Community Service Officer. Many South Enders were saddened when Dias was transferred to the BPD's school unit earlier this month.

USES president and CEO Maicharia Weir-Lytle and Stewart, both in evening gowns, greeted guests as they entered the atrium, where café and bar-style tables accommodated diners. Covered by a tent, the parking lot was transformed into a buffet and dining area and disco with USES 125 spelled out in lighted letters and numbers beside the dance floor.

Nineteen restaurants and bakeries, including Gaslight, Haley House Bakery and Café, Bar Mezzana, House of Siam, Petit Robert Bistro, South End Emporium, Pain d'Avignon and others provided small bites such as buffalo cauliflower and grilled-eggplant crostini as well as salads, appetizers, entrees and sweet and savory breads. Death by chocolate cake from Above and Beyond Catering and vegan ice-cream sundaes created by FoMu lent a sweet note to the party and an open bar with beer and wine flowed throughout the event.

After more than 90 minutes of eating, drinking and socializing, José Massó, host of WBUR-FM's "Con Salsat" program, emceed the event. Starting at 7:45, there were remarks from Massó, Weir-Lytle, event co-chair Jacqueline Fantuzzi describing the scope and effects of poverty on South End children and families and USES's plans to help them "disrupt the cycle of poverty." A short video combined remarks from Weir-Lytle on USES's mission and impact with reflections from neighbors who grew up participating in USES programs.

On the occasion of USES's 125th anniversary year, artist Bruce Bemis presented his portrait of Harriet Tubman to USES. Around 8:30, proceeds from the event: $283,000, up 37 per cent from the previous year's ticket sales, were announced, along with a giving challenge promising a match from an anonymous donor of up to $50,000 for donations made by the end of the evening. USES staff circulated with tablets ready to accept additional donations, and the event ultimately netted over $400,000.

After the program, guests made their way to the tent to dance to the sounds of DJ Braun Tapper, who presented mixes of classic dance tunes by Donna Summer, Michael Jackson and KC and the Sunshine Band as well as recent favorites such as Bruno Mars's "Uptown Funk", making everything sound fresh.

A sensitive and strong Bridges

The Bridges of Madison County
SpeakEasy Stage Company,

Pavilion, Boston Center for the Arts, through June 3. 617-933-

BY JULES BECKER

Robert Frost wrote of two roads, but “The Bridges of Madison County” has traveled down three. First there was the best-selling but often slow-going 1992 Robert James Waller novel. Three years later, Italian-American housewife Francesca’s romantic adventure with crack National Geographic photographer Robert picked up speed thanks to a sharply modulated Meryl Streep performance and a Clint Eastwood film adaptation that veered away from the maudlin.

The third incarnation, a recent musical collaboration (on Broadway in 2014) between Tony Award winners Marsha Norman (“The Color Purple”) and Jason Robert Brown (“Parade”) may straddle the line between Francesca’s emotional voyage and her family’s Mid-West trips. Still, Brown’s lush score—his second Tony winner—carries the heart of the story even when Norman’s spare book seems to understate it. Under Bevin O’Gara’s strong direction for SpeakEasy Stage Company’s vocally rich Boston premiere, Jennifer Ellis as Francesca and New York talent Christiaan Smith as Robert give full expression to the show’s spirited excursion.

Supplementing that spirit from the start is a design team that enhances Brown’s score and sometimes seems more vivid than Norman’s book. A wide space between the striking large triangles of Cameron Anderson’s disarmingly unadorned set could be signifying Francesca’s openness to a more exciting life and symbolically allowing for the life-changing entrance of Robert. Annie Weigand’s lighting signals the ups and downs of Francesca’s daily life and occasion apparel. Mr. Faucher is one of the few practitioners of couture dressmaking and creates one-of-a-kind ensembles for his clients in his South End atelier. His collections are seen routinely at the Ritz-Carlton, Boston Harbor, Four Seasons and Colonnade hotels in Boston, and have graced the pages of such publications as Women’s Wear Daily, Boston Magazine, The Boston Globe, The Boston Herald and New England Bride.

At the School of Fashion Design, Mr. Faucher teaches pattern making, construction, and draping at all levels. He tells his students, “everything in life is a learned skill, and putting in the time and effort is all that is required. Developing those skills happens over time, and everything can be learned.”

On May 11, the School of Fashion Design presented “Collection 2017,” their annual fashion show of student fashion designs. Students and models presented work at two separate sold out seatings in the School of Fashion Design’s gallery space at 136 Newbury Street in Boston.

The evening featured over 60 student designs in daywear, millinery, leather, and eveningwear.

“Our annual year-end fashion show is both our culminating student experience, as well as the launching point of our graduating students’ promising design careers,” said SFD President Dr. Denise Hammon. “If you were in attendance at the SFD fashion show, you were seeing the next generation of fashion professionals coming out of Boston.”

Mr. Faucher plays a vital role in producing the annual fashion show, from guiding students through the critique process, preparing them for judging, selecting models, curating the show lineup, directing back stage, serving as Master of Ceremonies, and much more. Collection 2017 was curated by SFD expert faculty and a panel of industry professional judges. Faculty advisors included Mr. Faucher, Margarita Grimes, and Lisa Taranto. Collection 2017 judges were Jane Conway Caspe, SFD Board of Trustee and owner of Wildflower Concierge of Nantucket; Gina deWolfe (’09), Owner & designer of deWolfe Leathers; Betsy Jenney of Betsy Jenney Boutique; and Firas Yousif, Owner & designer of Firas Yousif Originals.

Founded in 1934, the School of Fashion Design is the only educational institution in New England dedicated exclusively to the study of fashion design. The School of Fashion Design is a fully licensed fashion studio school offering a two-year Certificate in Fashion Design. Students may elect to pursue the two-year program on a full or part time basis, or take individual classes on a Continuing Education basis. New semesters begin each fall, spring and summer. SFD also offers teen workshops in fashion design throughout the year.

Collection 2017 corporate sponsors included Intercontinental Estate Corporation, Lui & Frasca, P.C., Fabric Place Basement, Dependable Cleaners, Threads Magazine, Denise Hajjar, Anna Nieman Couture, Kao Design Group, Tallulah & Poppy, Propel LLC, Alice Walk, Agathon Associates, and Siagel Entertainment. The show was professionally photographed by Tracy Aiguier Photography. Ticket sales and sponsorships of the fashion show support scholarships and programs for SFD students.

wartime back story. Mark Nagle's costumes reflect the change in Francesca as she begins to wear more fashionable clothes and shoes instead of her previous sensible ones as she awaits each visit from and meal with Robert Ellis and Smith display real chemistry during each rendezvous. Ellis wisely understates Francesca's Italian accent as an Italian-American who immigrated to Iowa after World War II—a la Streep in the film. Her moving narrative about her Italian former boyfriend Paolo and her impulsive sister make the standout song "Almost Real" a high point and as memorable as the most lyrical numbers in the exquisite Adam Guettel score for the recent musical "Light in the Piazza." Ellis stunningly captures Francesca's deep inner life, her passion for Robert and her undying devotion to her family.

For his part, Smith proves both sensitive and strong—the latter as both a good-looking hunk (particularly in an evocative love-making scene) and a confident man with articulate views. He moves with an ease that fits Robert and the right authority as the photographer takes shots of a bridge. Possessing a deeply resonant voice and rich tone, he beautifully captures Robert's enduring feeling for Francesca on the late second act solo "It All Fades Away." His duets with Ellis are equally affecting—notably on the first act-closing "Falling into You." Smith is a true find for SpeakEasy Stage.

"Bridges" admittedly makes fewer demands on its supporting cast as its farming scenes are more like afterthoughts and the second act Indiana State Fair opener is relatively brief, Misha Shields lively choreography here notwithstanding. Even so, Christopher Chew—always a big talent—tries in his considerable way to make Francesca's relatively conventional but essentially worthy husband more than a type, particularly as he brings fine feeling to Bud's solo "Something From a Dream." Most appealing among the featured players are Kerry A. Dowling as Francesca's remarkably loyal and non-judgmental neighbor Marge and Will McCartahan as her nonchalant yet philosophical husband. Katie Elinoff has the right combination of tenacity about farming and vulnerability as a young woman, while Nick Siccone makes Michael properly unpredictable at the fair and singular in his career views.

Call "The Bridges of Madison County" an unusual triumph for SpeakEasy Stage. After all, take away Norman's so-so book and the show's mild Mid-Western ambience and what do you have? Thanks to inspired design and shimmering Ellis and Smith, the answer is stunning visuals and a pair of musical leads unmatched thus far this year.
