Marc Hall Floral Designer for Green and White Ball

BY MICHELE MANISCALCO

South End resident and business owner Marc Hall of Marc Hall Design, 531 Albany Street, has been tapped to serve as floral designer of the 21st annual Green and White Ball, taking place on Friday, April 27 at the Four Seasons Hotel, 200 Boylston Street, to benefit the Friends of the Public Garden.

His team is designing the aesthetics and layout of the dining space, combining local and exotic flowers and foliage and furnishings to create images suggestive of the garden itself.

With an influx of young board members at the helm of the Friends group, this year's event will reflect a

Christopher Isherwood compared himself to "a camera, with its shutter open" in his 1931 novel "Goodbye to Berlin." In Rachel Bertone's powerfully disturbing Moonbox Productions revival of the landmark pre-Holocaust-set Broadway musical "Cabaret" (1966), an initial center stage gramophone becomes a framing device.

In its own way it becomes as important recording the fall of the Weimar Republic and the rise of the Third Reich as the Shoah (Holocaust) Foundation's growing oral history of the experiences of Jewish concentration camp survivors.

Eventually in Bertone's brilliant conception, key observations from a diversity of the musical's characters seem to rise from the very same handsome gramophone as a kind of eerie warning about the peril of apathy as well as the dangers of anti-Semitism and hatred of others.

In her playbill director's notes, she briefly traces the evolution of Isherwood's pre-Nazi Germany-set fiction into the John Van Druten 1951 play "I Am a Camera" that they inspired and eventually the award-winning original production (1967 Tony) and haunting New York revival (1998 Tony) of "Cabaret." She modestly describes her staging as "a fresh snapshot." In actuality, her blisteringly unsparing effort proves as unforgettable as its Broadway predecessors.

As with the strikingly raunchy revival, the pivotal welcoming Emcee moves chameleon-like by from master of ceremony to Nazi supporter and finally to victim wearing both the yellow badge required for Jews and pink triangle for gay. His provocative attire matches the decadence of Weimar Germany—by turns suspenders, undershirt and black pants, sinister trench coat and even blingy evening dress with large dangling earrings.

Great credit goes to Bertone's talented costume-designing mother Marian Bertone. The seedy Kit Kat Club is just as decadent as in the groundbreaking revival. Janie E. Howland has designed the Moonbox Production club with a metaphorical tilt that reminds audience members at all times that Berlin and Germany are quickly and inexorably giving way to Nazism. The musicians may not match the Emcee in suggestive attire as they did in the intimate Club 54-staged revival, but they play 'beautifully' under the vigorous direction of pianist-conductor Dan Rodriguez—particularly during a high energy Entr'acte.

That energy pervades director-choreographer Bertone's very capable cast as well. Phil Taylor has the agility and commanding presence that Alan Cumming brought to his Tony-deserving performance as the Emcee in the revival. He sings and moves with full dynamism—especially in the signature number "Wilkommen" and the chillingly ironic solo "I Don't Care Much."

Aimee Doherty brings fresh insight in song and portrayal to the role of apolitical English predecessor Kit Kat Club headliner Sally Bowles. Her building belt-rich rendition of the famous title number has both devil may care abandon and sadness as she looks to the empty chair where Germany-fleeing roommate and boyfriend Clifford Bradshaw used to sit. Jared Troilo gives the best-sung performance as bisexual novelist-tutor Clifford that this critic has seen (including both of the Alan Cumming-starring revivals and several Boston productions).

He rivetingly catches Bradshaw's rage as well as tenderness with Bowles as well as his early combination of naiveté and renewed attraction to Kit Kat Club Bobby (whom he met at the Nightingale Club in London in his back story). His duet on the disarmingly carefree early "Perfectly Marvelous" duet with Doherty has appealing chemistry. Another standout is Marilyn Zschau's pathos-rich performance as landlady Fraulein Schneider. Her heartfelt delivery of Schneider's anthem-like defense of her obsession-like determination to survive the Nazis in "What Would You Do?" has the right combination of challenge and sadness. Ray O'Hare is properly charming and likeable as Jewish fruit seller Herr Schultz—particular with Schneider, though he could do with a bit more of the edge that Danny Burstein brought to the role in the 2014 reprisal of the revival.

The cast tellingly takes no bow after the Holocaust-connected final exit of badge-wearing Jews and gays. As yet, hatred sadly has no curtain as the Moonbox Productions revival importantly warns.

Hall

new direction even as it evokes the Public Garden's past with Hall's design concept, an homage to William Doogue, seminal 19th century superintendent of the Public Garden who introduced tropical flowers to the tranquil, Back Bay green space.

"There's a younger generation coming up now, and the board reflects that. Wanting to re-brand it and make it something fresh and new, they had the opportunity to move the ball across the park to the Four Seasons," Hall said. In an effort to revamp the look of the event, the Friends board requested Hall's design services.

"They approached me and asked if I would like to be part of Green and White this year. I was honored, and at the time we were strategizing about where to put our charitable contributions this year. We like to focus on ecology and animals as much as possible, so the Green and White Ball made perfect sense. We do a lot of work at the Four Seasons, so I see that park all the time," Hall said. Hall's design for the Green and White Ball follows Doogue's innovative strategy of combining the indigenous and the exotic, incorporating species such as Boston ivy with far-flung varieties including Monstera and whale-back fern, all in shades of green and white. For the central table, Hall is using overlapping mirrors edged in moss and flowers in small vases to recreate the look of the beloved Swan Pond. Once approached with the assignment, Hall went to his drawing board to create his theme honoring Doogue's concept. "The reason why these tropical plants were brought in is because it was a time when people couldn't travel the way they do today. They had a green space that would allow them to learn about and identify plants from around the world," Hall said.

Self-taught in design and formally educated in horticulture and landscape design, Hall was working in a restaurant in the mid-1980s when he took a job at a family-owned florist shop in the Concord area. Frustrated with the 1950s and 1960s-rooted aesthetics and inventory of the business, including the use of foil to wrap flowers and the narrow range of familiar flowers such as daisies, gladioli and carnations supplied by the store's New Hampshire-based wholesaler, Hall had the opportunity to revamp the shop when it was sold to new owners.

He replaced furnishings and materials that he deemed tacky and outdated and expanded the shop's floral repertoire. Taken on a buying trip to the Boston Flower Exchange, Hall discovered a world of exotic blooms and modern design ideas that he used to update and expand the Concord store's offerings. Hall eventually came to work in the city, first joining Bob Selvin at the now-closed Blooming Affairs as a wedding floral designer.

From there, he segued to his own floral studio in South Boston, followed by seven years as creative director of Harry Winston floral in the Back Bay. In 2011, Hall opened his current studio on Albany Street. In deciding upon the name for his new business, "I chose 'design' in the name because I didn't want to be typecast; I wanted to take on any kind of design project that interested me," Hall said. Large windows wrapping around two sides of the showroom and natural wood walls and beams give the studio an outdoorsy feel, with sleek furnishings adding urban sophistication. Hall changes the window décor seasonally, and the current display recalls last month's series of Nor'easters, using boughs and twigs from a tree felled in the yard of a staff member's parents.

The current involvement in the Green and White Ball is consistent with Marc Hall

Design's ongoing philanthropic efforts. "We are great supporters of the MSPCA and the Moondance Gala at the Esplanade," Hall said. "I made a conscious effort last year to focus on fewer charities and make a larger difference on those events."

10 Chandler Street
Boston, MA 02116

Meet Pepito, a perfect rabbit - cute, curious and fluffy! He is a little larger than most, and he is very independent and outgoing. Pepito loves to explore, is very social and will come right up to say hello! He would love a home with a very large x-pen or even a whole room to himself. Rabbit care is fairly easy to learn. He needs access to clean hay and water at all times and a good-sized enclosure plus several hours a day of exercise outside the cage. Pepito needs to be able to stretch his limbs, run and hop and tire himself out every day, keeping him physically and mentally healthy so he won't be destructive out of boredom. Some cheap toy ideas are cardboard boxes, (without tape), toilet paper rolls, paper towel rolls, crumpled plain paper, cereal boxes, phone books and any other paper/cardboard items you aren't using anymore. If you think Pepito might be a good match for you, please plan a visit to our shelter today or call 617.226.5602. The shelter is open Tuesday through Thursday 1-7pm & Friday through Sunday 1-4pm, excluding some holidays.

St. Stephen's Youth Programs Parent Coalition Wins $2.4M

For Social Emotional Health in Schools

SUBMITTED BY SSYP

Mayor Marty Walsh has announced an additional $2.4 million for the Boston Public Schools budget, thanks to a campaign led by parents of St. Stephen's Youth Programs and a coalition of teachers, students, community members, nurses, psychologists, and social workers. The funds will be used to employ specialized personnel: eight nurses and twelve psychologists and social workers.

After analyzing the lack of resources for socio-emotional support in schools, a team of Latinx parents from St. Stephen's Youth Programs concluded that the lack of this support was having a negative impact on students' learning and health. According to Janet M., an immigrant mother of three girls, "My daughters had to wait three weeks for an appointment with the school's psychologist when I was about to be deported; this was because the psychologist's caseload was too big to respond to an urgent crisis. My children only wanted someone to listen in those tough moments."

Parents soon discovered that this type of caseload and limited support was a common issue in all the schools, so they launched a campaign to create district-wide solutions. They presented a unified Latinx voice at the School Committee Meeting on February 7, 2018. Wearing red, dozens of parents presented testimony about the need to increase the budget and dedicate sufficient staff to meet the socio-emotional needs of students and families. Many nurses and other school mental health professionals joined the arguments of the parents, sharing their own stories and experiences in the schools.

Parents from St. Stephen's Youth Programs testified at a press conference organized by BEJA (Boston Education Justice Alliance) on March 14th, 2018. Isabel Heredia, a St. Stephen's Youth Programs parent, said, "My 6-year-old daughter asked me, 'Mami, where do I go if a shooter comes into the school?'" This conversation between mother and daughter came after the shooting at the Marjory Stoneman Douglas school in Parkland, FL, which sparked a national conversation about mental health in schools. "We need psychologists that can help our children in situations like this. If our children don't feel safe, they won't be concentrated on learning," said Ms. Heredia.

Thanks to the coalition's efforts, on Wednesday, April 4, 2018 Mayor Marty Walsh announced that the City of Boston would add $2.4 million dollars to the public school budget. "Providing students with resources to help foster their physical, emotional, and mental health goes a long way toward putting them, and keeping them, on a path to success," Mayor Walsh said. The funds will pay eight nurses, seven bilingual psychologists, four bilingual social workers, and one director of social work. Parents particularly applauded the commitment to hiring bilingual specialists. Rafaela Polanco, a St. Stephen's Youth Programs parent who immigrated to the US two years ago, said, "When you come from a country where the language is not English, it is hard to integrate into schools. Having bilingual staff inside the public schools helps our children's development."

The $2.4 million are a step forward, but this funding still falls short of meeting the needs of schools and students. Even counting these new positions, 50 out of 125 public schools—40 percent of schools—still lack a full-time nurse. Ariel Branz,

PROJECT PROPONENT:

MEPT/LMP Harrison/Albany Block LLC & MEPT/LMP Gambro Building LLC

PROJECT DESCRIPTION:

On March 26, 2018, the Proponent submitted the First Amendment to Development Plan for Planned Development Area No.110, in connection with the Harrison Albany Block project in the South End. As currently approved, the Development Plan does not specify from which point the required setbacks are to be measured. The First Amendment clarifies that consistent with the original approvals, all setbacks are to be measured from the property line. The design and uses of the project will remain the same as previously approved by the BPDA and the Boston Zoning Commission.
