

Pine Street Inn Exceeds $50M Capital Campaign Goal

To Expand Permanent Housing for Those Moving Out of Homelessness

SUBMITTED BY PINE STREET INN

Pine Street Inn, New England's largest homeless services organization, announced today that it has exceeded its "Key Moments" capital campaign goal, raising $51M. The campaign funds will help the nonprofit reach 1,000+ units of permanent supportive housing throughout greater Boston. The funds will provide for the creation of 200 new units of housing, for the repair and improvement to existing housing units, and will establish a source of permanent funding for supportive services. The campaign has also helped to scale up a new generation of programs critical to both homelessness prevention and ending homelessness earlier and faster.

The Key Moments campaign was announced in September 2019 as part of the organization's 50th anniversary, with a goal of $50M and marked the nonprofit's largest fundraising initiative to date.

With a 95% retention rate in its housing, Pine Street Inn has demonstrated that permanent supportive housing is the solution to homelessness, and the campaign has allowed the organization to accelerate its housing plan. Additionally, the pandemic has reinforced the importance of housing as a social determinant of health.

"Pine Street Inn is beyond grateful for the extraordinary show of support from so many individuals, corporations and foundations," said Lyndia Downie, Pine Street's President and Executive Director. "Not only did the campaign exceed its goal, it was completed a year early—and during a pandemic! These funds will allow us to move forward with large-scale housing, which is desperately needed. At the same time, there is still an ongoing need to cover our everyday operational expenses, and we are so very grateful to our entire community of supporters."

The achievement of exceeding the campaign goal was made possible through the generosity of

Haunted Graveyard Tour at South End Burying Ground

BY SOUTH END NEWS STAFF

The sunny, mild weather contrasted with the macabre theme at this year's Haunted Graveyard Tour at the South End Burying Ground on Washington Street, which took place on Halloween Day, Sunday, October 31 at 2:00 and 3:00 PM. Approximately 50 people gathered inside the customarily locked graveyard to hear South End News contributing writer Michele D. Maniscalco present a history of the early 19th century burying ground whose history parallels the initial development of the South End, along with macabre tales plucked from South End history. Afterward, attendees of all ages, some in costume, eagerly explored the peaceful and scenic final resting place, photographing headstones, tombs, and crypts. While the weather cooperated for the 2:00 PM tour, a rain shower cut short the 3:00 PM presentation.

Elizabeth Sawyer is no witch, though many unseen residents of Edmonton think otherwise in Jen Silverman's 2018 play "Witch" (influenced by the Elizabethan play "The Witch of Edmonton"). Rumors run rampant here—a factor that makes her seem infectious to the semi-rural village. Addressing the audience, Elizabeth declares, "I'm like a disease that only I have caught." This intriguing outsider wonders whether things can get better for her. Along comes a mysterious young devil-in-training

Emerson College Student Trevor McLean Wins Annual International Public Relations Competition for GlobCom

Communication Studies major Trevor McLean '22 was on the winning team of this year's GlobCom, an annual international public relations competition held June 2-5 that asks students to work together with peers around the world to solve a PR problem.

This year's client was The Daily Mile, an initiative that aims to promote physical, mental, social, and emotional wellbeing in children through jogging. McLean's team's "Run to the Rainbow" campaign was selected by a panel of judges as the most effective and creative.

"Having to complete an incredibly hands-on project with your peers being located halfway around the world was already a tough task," more than 800 supporters, with gifts ranging from $5 to $5M, from both the public and private sectors. Lead donors included Bank of America, Liberty Mutual Insurance, Mass General Brigham, Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company (MassMutual) and Suffolk Cares – each committing $1M towards the Boston's Way Home Fund (BWHF), launched under former Mayor Martin J. Walsh in partnership with Bank of America. BWHF raised $10M to supplement the work of the city's action plan to prevent and end chronic and veteran homelessness in Boston.

The completion of this campaign marks a milestone for Pine Street Inn, and the organization is extremely grateful for its community of supporters who helped exceed the $50M goal to expand critically needed resources for the city's most vulnerable residents. Although these funds will enable the organization to plan for future large-scale housing and services, there continues to be an urgent need for support of its daily operations, including emergency shelter, street outreach and job training, which depend on the ongoing generosity of its annual donors at all levels.

McLean said. "On top of that, COVID made things even more challenging for my team and [me]. In the end, we were able to fight through the adversity and end up winning the competition! After reflecting back on this year's GlobCom project, I again realize that I am very appreciative for the experience. I learned a lot about PR and my interest [in] the field has really grown."

Emerson College has represented the United States at GlobCom since the competition's inception in 2003. The College is one of 14 institutions in 15 countries on five continents to participate. Each year (2020 excepted) a different university hosts the competition. This year, due to the ongoing pandemic, a hybrid conference was hosted by Blanquerna University - Ramon Llull in Barcelona, Spain, with many students, including those at Emerson, participating remotely.

McLean was a student in Global PR last semester, taught by senior affiliated faculty member David Gerzof Richard.

"GlobCom is a fantastic opportunity for students studying public relations at Emerson College. The class and the competition present students with real-world international PR challenges that must be navigated in order to succeed. Students need to work through nuances in time zones, language, culture, religion, access to technology, among other challenges to work together towards the singular goal of winning the GlobCom competition," Richard said.

"Trevor did an outstanding job working with his team to get over the finish line."

named Scratch with offers that may depend on her asking the right questions. Questions become a kind of metaphor for self-examination in a play that entertains in a lively Huntington Theatre premiere even as audiences may question where it is going.

That entertainment involves the evolving fortunes of several very different characters. There is affluent widower Sir Arthur Banks who seems more interested in having a success-minded son than being a devoted father. His flamboyant son, who loves the English folk moves known as Morris dancing, repeatedly resists his father's efforts to find him a wife. Ready to give up his soul, he wants to kill poor rival Frank, a go-getter whom his father favors. The rub is that Frank has secretly married Arthur's servant Winifred.

Silverman's play seems to promise dark, edgy comedy but generally resorts to humor—even a stretch of madcap conflict. Audiences may question why the play does not provide a real back story for and more detail about Elizabeth. Still, the question of where one wants to be in life is always a valuable one, and Rebecca Bradshaw's taut direction makes the characters' respective odysseys worth watching. Lyndsay Allyn Cox makes Elizabeth a properly appealing loner. Michael Underhill makes a dashing Scratch—with a special nod to costume designer Chelsea Kerl for his snappy leather outfit. Nick Sulfaro may camp it up as Cuddy, but his Morris dances sequence is a standout.

An actual Elizabeth Sawyer was hanged as a witch in 1621. Are there villages like Edmonton today? "Witch" is likely to have some audience members looking for answers to their own questions.

Call "BLKS" a New York variation on Chekhov. In Aziza Barnes' savvy, often sweet play, three very different 2015 Brooklyn roommates share a non-biological sisterhood. Accounting consultant June, budding standup performer Imani and independent film screenwriter Octavia struggle with career and relationship. Their respective needs can bring them both joy and sadness, but ultimately they know—as with the siblings in Chekhov's "Three Sisters"—that they can turn to each other for support and understanding.

The beginning of "BLKS" may call to mind the opening lovemaking of Terrence McNally's "Frankie and Johnny in the Claire de Lune" as Octavia and her film director girlfriend Ry engage in sex. The big difference in Barnes' play is that Octavia finds a mole in her clitoris—a discovery that impacts her life and work. Imani, whose father died in Haiti, is trying to present an Eddie Murphy routine that pleased him and fondly recalls watching standup with him. June, who holds a degree in math, continues to deal with the infidelities of her boyfriend Jamal, who keeps coming back to her. Barnes skillfully moves from serious situations to lighter ones—always with affection for the intrepid if sometimes intimidated roommates.

That intimidation involves questions of respect and dignity. Octavia, who wears a George Floyd's T-shirt at one point, contends "They still don't believe we are people." June suffers an assault and generally worries about stalkers. Imani resorts to a spiel about a black survival rate when she meets a naïve white woman. Still, there are moments of joy and humor—especially when a sensitive young black man named Justin protectively follows June and climbs to her window a la Romeo with Juliet. Calling himself "my mother's son," he sports a sewing kit and a first aid kit inside his jacket. Career-wise, June seems the most successful—landing a consulting accountant position with prestigious Deloitte.

Director Tonia Jones briskly paces most of the roommates' ups and downs. The sisterhood trio possesses real authenticity. Thomika Marie Bridwell catches June's professional authority and her personal vulnerability. Kelsey Fonise brings fine tenderness to Imani's memories. Standout Shanell Chloe Villegos has all of Octavia's outspokenness. Sondra Seonne Seri finds Ry's scaring as well as her callousness. Sharmarke Yusuf has comic talent as quirky but kind Justin. Meghan Hornblower makes the most of somewhat clueless white women.

Jenna McFarland Lord's vivid set design suggests a blend of urban graffiti and African art. Cassandra Queen captures both the casual and the dressy sides of the roommates.

"BLKS" has an adults-only reality that by turns will tickle, touch and trouble audiences. Be prepared to love its heart. SpeakEasy Stage has made it throb with great inner life.
