Did "The Sleeping Beauty" prove a quick public favorite after its 1890 St. Petersburg, Russia premiere because it has a happy ending? After all, the fairy tale-based ballet ends with a wedding rather than the sad conclusion of the

CLAIRE BARDEN

1934 - 2023

Claire was born March 11, 1934 in Tewksbury, MA and died May 16, 2023 at her home in Jamaica Plain, MA, following a battle with cancer.

She grew up in Framingham, the adopted daughter of Ruth and Lowell Barden. At age 18, she joined the Army and served in Germany and France.

When she returned to the States, she settled in the Boston area and soon met the love of her life, Lois Johnson. They were together for 56 years, until Lois's death in 2020.

Claire and Lois were a strong force in the gay and lesbian rights movement. For many years they were active in the Boston chapter of Daughters of Bilitis (DOB) which, in the 1970's, was the only nationwide lesbian organization. They were also active in the LGBT Aging Project and had starring roles in Stu Maddux's film Gen Silent.

A resident of the South End for over 40 years, Claire ran a successful professional picture framing business from her home.

Her work was museum archival quality, and her clients included Julia Child. She later opened a B&B in the front room of their brownstone on Warren Avenue. Claire and Lois were also very involved in the creation and maintenance of the James Hayes Park next to their home.

Claire was a spiritual person, brought up in the Methodist faith. She loved opera, classical music, and the arts. She had a heart of gold, which was masked by a sharp tongue and bawdy humor.

After a small graveside service, Claire was laid to rest in Mount Auburn Cemetery next to her beloved Lois. She is survived by her half sister, Joan McDonald of New Hampshire; her niece, Barbara Takahashi and husband Sam; great nephew and great niece, Nick and Anna Takahashi, all of San Diego, CA. Donations in her memory may be made to The Animal Welfare Society of West Kennebunk, ME (animalwelfare.org), The Animal Rescue League of Boston (arlboston.org), or Laudholm Farm in Wells, ME (wellsserve.org).

Mayor Michelle Wu's Neighborhood Coffee Hour

Photos by Jon Seamans

Barbara Zack looks over the selection of flowers grown in the Boston Parks and Recreation Department's Franklin Park greenhouses at Mayor Michelle Wu's Neighborhood Coffee Hour hosted by the Parks Department at Hayes Park. The May 25 event offered attendees free flowers, Dunkin' coffee and donuts, fresh fruit from Star Market, and the opportunity to meet one-on-one with Mayor Wu and other City officials. For a list of upcoming dates and locations go to boston.gov/coffee-hours.

other Tchaikovsky-orchestrated masterwork "Swan Lake" (1877 premiere)—a gem that was surprisingly not as well-received at first. At the same time, the third act includes appearances by such well-known characters as Puss in Boots, Cinderella, Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf. Amusing elements notwithstanding, the Marius Petipa "The Sleeping Beauty"—with additional choreography by Sir Frederick Ashton—is blessed with several demanding signature sequences that Boston Ballet is re-awakening in an enchanting new revival at the Citizen Bank Opera House.

Those sequences are kissed with superb technique and rich spirit well before the entrance of title Princess Aurora or Prince Desire who will awaken her. The Lilac Fairy—danced with angelic charm and striking turns by Viktorina Kapitonova (casts alternate throughout the run)—headlines the benevolent fairies who attend the christening of baby Aurora during the Prologue. All six dancers—dressed in elegance by costume designer David Walker—deliver their respective greetings with strong extensions and expressive hand moves. Thanks to John Cuff's artful lighting, the arrival of evil fairy Carabosse—portrayed with evocative malevolence by Chrystyn Fentroy—has the right ominous effect. "Nutcracker" fans may call to mind the mouse brigade in that ballet as Carabosse's creatures do a brief set of antics around her.

The first act opens with a handsome garland dance as well as efforts to prevent Carabosse's spindle-connected curse from affecting now 16 Aurora. With the entrance of four suitor princes, a rose-accompanied meeting takes center stage. The ballerina dancing the role of the princess is called upon to remain en pointe as she greets prince after prince. Ji Young Chae not only brings fine extension and remarkable control to this challenge but also even holds en pointe for a time after her standout sequence. The bridge-like second act gives notable attention to tutored Prince Desire, who of course eventually awakens the century-sleeping Aurora with his kiss. Jeffrey Cirio brings fitting thoughtfulness to the role as well as his gifts as a superlative principal dancer.

Those gifts and Ji Young Chae's come together in the grand pas de deux that crowns the wedding festivities of the alternately amusing and stirring third act. Children and adults alike right chuckle as Abigail Merlis as White Cat and Isaac Akiba as Puss in Boots vividly spar. Seo Hye Han as Princess Florine and Sangmin Lee as Bluebird dance gracefully as celebrants. Lauren Herfindahl, Addie Paul and especially Paul Craig bring distinction to the singular wedding pas de trois.

Best of all are Chae and Cirio—both convincingly in love as the wedding couple and excitingly eye-catching in their form. Chae captures Aurora's simple joy in herartful turns and extensions. Cirio displays exciting speed—particularly on one-foot turns. Their ease accomplishing complex configurations makes their pairing breathtaking.

A century may pass before a prince awakens the title beauty. "The Sleeping Beauty" may be a long if vivid ballet. By contrast, Boston Ballet's rousing revival is an occasion to celebrate in its own right.
