Contributing Writer

For John Heminges and Henry Condell, “To be or not to be” was as much to do with the First Folio as with “Hamlet.” It may be no exaggeration to say that this authoritative 1623 edition of 36 plays would never have come into being without the determined and unflagging efforts of these Lions of the Board.

Achinglye playwright Lauren Gunderson (“Silent Sky”) has dramatized their devoted collaboration in “The Book of Will”—a richly detailed play that not only honors Shakespeare and the greatest theatrical achievement in the English language but also evokes his colleagues’ professional and personal challenges. Thanks to gifted director Bryn Naoot (a recent strong all-female “Julius Caesar”), an inspired Hub Theatre Company edition brings the Hemings–Condell collaboration to bridge between the British Abbey and the American theatre world. The story of Hemings—Condell, two young men who met while studying in London, is a tale of love and friendship that will resonate with audiences today.

“The Book of Will” begins three years after the playwright’s death (1616) in a London where “noises” are attempting to play “lions” in pathetic performances that make a mockery of Shakespeare. Hemings, Condell and the iconic Globe Theatre actor Richard Burbage (who would die in 1619)—concerned about the authenticity of the Bard’s canon—know that the true texts could vanish if not published. Preferring a high quality folio to cheap quarterns, Hemings and Condell agree to create a collection of a dozen plays with exacting Ed Crane as its editor.

As Gunderson presents Hemings and Condell, they are a striking study in contrast. Hemings comes across as a reserved financial manager, where Condell—who speaks of being Will’s best friend—seems more ready to take risks to realize their objectives. At the same time, the two colleagues display the kind of easy mutual affection common to friends these days. Condell will even offer to kiss Crane in appreciation of his considerable efforts.

Eventually the First Folio begins to come together as a variety of factors bear fruit. Rival poet-playwright Ben Jonson agrees to write a preface—in which he calls Will “the soul of the age”—and Lady Emilia Lanier—often identified by scholars as the Dark Lady of several Shakespeare sonnets—makes a significant financial contribution. Publisher Isaac Jaggard commits to an “unrivalled collection of unrivalled plays,” and Crane might insist on no alterations to the texts of the plays.

Designers Trevor Nunn has brilliantly constructed a surrounding set piece that allows audience members to see characters moving to and fro in the background and enables the collaterals to hang up folio pages—with kudos to designer Ted Kneirem for evoking the sound of the printing. A first-rate cast captures both the deep feeling and rich ideas of Gunderson’s writing. Brendan O’Neill has all of Hemings’ uncom- mon attention to the plays and tenderness.

Library Shuttle
Submitted by Friends of the South End Library

Due to the temporary closure of the South End Library, due to an agreement with Age Strong, a shuttle service to the Parker Hill Branch will run on Mondays and Wednesdays and will accommodate 8 people with reservations for a 10AM pickup at the South End Library. The return will be at noon.

Parker Hill is a smaller branch where South Enders can get to know the staff as well as pick up and drop off books. If you want to pick up your “hold” books at Parker Hill, you will need to go to the bpl.org website, sign into your Account, and go to My Settings.

Then select Account Preferences/Hold and Pickup Location/Change. There you can select Parker Hill and save your selection. The books you put on hold will then be sent to Parker Hill and you will be notified in the usual way when they arrive. There is no fee for “overdue” books; whenever the book is returned, the fee is removed.

Rachel and Bill Motley and Laura Will and David Nicholson co-chaired the 26th annual gala, which raised over $1.6 million for important research initiatives and vital patient care programs at MGIC.

RAFANELLI Events provided a stunning backdrop inspired by the beloved children's book series, Frog and Toad. The Omni was transformed into a whimsical forest with large-scale storybook drawings and oversized trees, while tablescapes of river rocks, mushrooms and fiddleheads created a sense of adventure reminiscent of a walk through the woods.

Joanne Wolfe, MD, MPH, MGIC Physician-in-Chief, Allan M. Goldstein, MD, MGIC Surgeon-in-Chief, and William Curley, MD, Chief Medical Officer, Massachusetts General Hospital, led guests through an poignant speaking program and shared the inspiring story of adolescent patient, Mason's treatment for an eating disorder.

One of the highlights of the live auction, enlivened by The Sportz Hub's Rich Shereen-leb, was a one-of-a-kind experience at the 150th anniversary of the Kentucky Derby courtesy of West Point Thoroughbreds. The package included a VIP brunch at the track and partial ownership in a thoroughbred racing horse, plus custom derby attire by designer Sue Sartor.

Guests enjoyed a special performance by Andrew Marshall, finalist of NBC's "The Voice" Season 20 and a Brown native who underwent treatment for leukemia at MGIC for almost four years. Carnival booths games like Corn Hole and "Operation" and lively dance floor led by Murder the DJ rounded out the spectacular night.

with his supportive wife Rebecca—played with conviction and caring by Laura Rocklyn. Cleveland Nicoll combines fiery enthusiasm for the Folio and affecting brotherly love for Heminges as Condell.

Dev Lodge moves with crisp authority through memorable lines from the plays as Burbage, and John Blair has the right combination of ego and boorish individuality as Jonson. Lauren Elias is properly empathetic as Heminges’s daughter Alice. Jeremy Bearle has Isaac’s strong will and professional pride, and Josh Teleman captures Crane’s unrevealing principle. Jessica Golden has Elisabeth Condell’s warmth, and Robert Thorpe II amuses as an inept actor.

For Condell, stories are real in their own way. The same can be heartily said of Hub Theatre Company’s wonderfully stirring “The Book of Will.”
