Should a show have a strong concept ala the masterworks of Kander and Ebb or Sondheim? For Man in Chair—the middle-aged arm chair aficionado of the Canadian musical "The Drowsy Chaperone" (1998, 2006-Broadway), a 1920's lively musical comedy is the answer. A dreamy and lively well-costumed show can lift his spirits and provide him with a needed escape from reality.

That kind of theater magic takes over the fanciful high-energy revival of the five Tony Award winner at the Lyric Stage Company of Boston—one that should entertain the most demanding local theatergoers.

At the start of "The Drowsy Chaperone," Man in Chair seems to be this demanding—even as he claims in the purposely dark opening that he hates theater. Quickly, though, this agoraphobic stage right theatergoer reveals that his favorite musical is a 1928 show of the same name and proceeds to play a vinyl recording of it.

As he comments to the audience on the pleasures of 1920's musical comedy, the show-within-a-show fictional "The Drowsy Chaperone" comes to life—with Cameron McEachern's vivid scenic design, Seth Bodie's very colorful period costumes and John Malinowski's nuanced lighting.

Bob Martin and Don McKellar's often madcap book depends upon a parody of the genre—including mistaken identities, characters in disguise and unlikely romance. Here a self-centered gigolo named Adolpho mistakes the tipsy-therefore 'drowsy'—Chaperone for musical star-fiancée Janet Van De Graaf.

At one point Janet pretends to be a Representative John Moran to secure $230,000 of earmark funding in the FY25 House budget for several organizations that reflect the diversity and community in the 9th Suffolk District. The budget will now proceed to the Senate Ways and Means committee.

The allocation of the earmark funding is as below:

$75,000: Inquilinos Boricuas en Acción (IBA)

IBA supports individuals and families in breaking the cycle of poverty and achieving socio-economic mobility through high-quality, evidence-based education, and financial empowerment programming for residents. Its arts program serves as the hub for Latinx Arts in New England. The funds will help with the construction of La CASA, the Center for Arts, Self-determination, and Activism, which is set to break ground this spring.

$25,000: League of Women for Community Service

The League of Women for Community Service is among the oldest continuing Black women's organizations in the United States. Their historical headquarters at 558 Massachusetts Avenue in Lower Roxbury once housed young Black women, served as a meeting place hosting various programs, and held a library with archival materials. This was all in an era where the Black community struggled with lack of access with other venues due to redlining. The funds will go toward the current restoration efforts of the house, which will re-establish the League's legacy and history in the city.

$50,000: Berkeley Community Garden

Berkeley Community Garden, which runs the length of a city block, has stood as a beacon of resistance in the South End neighborhood for over 50 years and remains only because of neighborhood activism championing the effort to preserve green space. The garden's 150 plots are heavily utilized by residents - prominently the Chinese community - providing traditional foods produced using culturally relevant gardening techniques. The funds would allow for significant and much-needed renovations on the garden, including the installation of 50+ trellises, which would create more space on each plot for growth and provide a community space in an urban environment.

$70,000: Soccer Unity Project

Soccer Unity Project brings together diverse communities across the city through the universal game of soccer, hosting tournaments such as the Boston Unity Cup soccer tournament. At its core, the organization provides an opportunity for youth of any background to engage in the sport and to use the soccer pitch as a "hub" of connection, intersection, inclusion, and community building. The funds would provide much-needed funding for Soccer Unity Project's many programs aimed at youth in our city.

$10,000: The BASE

The BASE is a youth program for urban talent, uplifting students across the city not only through sports, but also by helping navigate and succeed in academics, college applications, and careers. All their student-athletes are given the opportunity to partake in college and job fairs, counseling, and workshops - all programmed by the BASE to ensure every student graduates high school equipped with a game-winning plan. The funds will be dedicated to furthering the BASE's mission to provide every student with the support they need and deserve.

French woman named Mimi in a sequence during which her dashing but somewhat clueless fiancé Robert Martin skates while blindfolded. An impresario named Feldzieg—surely an allusion to Ziegfeld—wants to keep Janet in his Follies. Two gangsters pass themselves off as pastry chefs. Look for wedding-hosting Mrs. Tottendale sharing vodka with her attentive butler. Anxious best man George struggles to find a justice of the peace, but a deus ex machina character saves the day.

During his humorous side commentary, Man in Chair notes stars of the recording of the fictional musical. Lyric Stage cast members—under Larry Sousa's sharp direction—both capture their roles and smartly resemble the stars to whom Man alludes. Jay Clark has the right appeal as Janet and displays the dynamism Man in Chair attributes to a Jane Roberts.

Jared Troilo catches Robert's cheerfulness and good nature and looks as handsome as purported matinee idol Percy Hyman. Damon Singletary finds all of the business focus of Feldzieg—whom the armchair expert observes was played by a veteran performer named Jack Adler. Maureen Keiller has confidante Drowsy Chaperone's vulnerability and has all of the presence that Man associates with a supposed great stage actress named Beatrice Stockwell. Christian Mancinas-Garcia captures Adolpho's amusing gigolo and the style of supposed silent movie star Roman Bartelli.

Matthew Stern—arguably now the dean of Hub music directors—does his very best with a sometimes underwhelming Lisa Lambert and Greg Morrison score that often seems to parody 1920's fare. His efforts are especially vibrant on the standout "As We Stumble Along" with a transcendent Keiller. Double threat Souza keeps the choreography catchy—particularly for the tap duo for Troilo and Mark Linehan as George.

Best of all is Paul Melendy's alternately spellbound and bluesy Man in Chair. Comically gifted Melendy displays all of Man's expressiveness whether slamming intermissions (none in this musical), reacting at the sidelines to plot entanglements and fantastical situations and even referring to a chupah. His virtuoso performance alone is worth the price of admission.

Quite simply, Lyric Stage's rousing revival of "The Drowsy Chaperone" is an intoxicating pleasure.
